Hello to all,

Here's the latest regarding our friend:

The most recent Interrogation Plan has been signed off on by the appropriate (all the way up to the 2 Star) DOD individuals. As it presently stands, tomorrow night (10/02/2002 - Wednesday @ 2300 hours) # 063 will be picked up at the Brig (totally manacled, hooded, and gagged) for transport to Delta. After the transport, the detainee will be un-hooded allowed to look around to ensure that he is in fact at Delta. He will then be taken to one of the CTC trailers where he will be asked four (4) 'core' questions. If he is uncooperative, as everyone believes he will be, he will then be immediately transported to a holding cell at Camp X-Ray.

Once at X-Ray, the DHS will begin the interrogation process with 2 interrogators and one of their 'Behavioral Scientists' observing. After a 6 hour session, the DHS has another team to continue with the scenario. The lead team will then take the third 6 hour session (myself and [redacted] been specifically asked to observe this team from a strictly behavioral perspective). After this 18 hour period, the detainee will be allowed to rest for 4 hours before the process will begin again for a yet-to-be determined time frame.

[redacted] and I made it very clear that we would be available for observation only for the initial time at Delta and then for the initial lead DHS team 6 hour session. After that, we will be "on call" should something positive happen. We had an hour meeting this afternoon with all DHS team personnel to get everyone up to speed on what was happening. The DHS group, including Lt. Col [redacted] feels confident that this will do what needs to be done to obtain # 063's cooperation.

SSA [redacted] has been fully briefed of this situation.

[redacted] it is our recommendation [redacted] and myself that should FBIHQ want to send anyone down to question # 063 concerning FBI issues, that they wait at least a week after the aforementioned DHS mission has been completed.

Obviously, the above is subject to change. I will advise as appropriate.
