MOTION OF AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE

The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) requests leave to file a brief as amicus curiae in the above-captioned case. This case raises important questions under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (“RFRA”) regarding whether Plaintiff’s religious exercise is substantially burdened by a federal regulation that requires Plaintiff to self-certify to its third party administrator that it objects to providing contraceptive coverage. Amicus seeks to provide this Court with an additional perspective on these issues. A copy of the amicus brief that amicus seeks leave to file has been submitted with this motion.

The ACLU is a nationwide nonpartisan organization of nearly 500,000 members, dedicated to protecting the fundamental liberties and basic civil rights guaranteed by state and federal Constitutions. Amicus is well-positioned to submit an amicus brief in this case. The ACLU and its state affiliates have long been committed to defending religious liberty, including defending the right of individuals to freely practice their religion. See, e.g., Complaint, Pastor John Lewis v. City of Scottsburg, Ind., No. 4:04-cv-0125-SEB-WGH (S.D. Ind. June 22, 2004) (challenging police department's threats on Baptist minister and his congregation for protesting in public areas and expressing anti-abortion views).¹ At the same time, the ACLU and its affiliates protect the constitutional right to reproductive choice² and women's right to live free from discrimination.³ See, e.g., Complaint, Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc. v. Comm'r, Ind. State Dep't of Health, No. 1:13-cv-01335-JMS-MJD (S.D. Ind. Aug. 22, 2013) (challenging unnecessary regulations targeted at one women's health care center aimed at causing the clinic to shut down); Complaint, Hegar v. Panetta, No. 12-cv-06005-EMC (N.D. Cal. Nov. 27, 2013) (complaint challenging the Department of Defense's policy that categorically excluded women from assignment to units whose primary mission is to engage in direct ground combat).

Amicus has a significant interest in the outcome of this case and in the other cases across the country seeking to invalidate the federal contraception rule. The intersection of the various civil liberties issues in this case makes amicus uniquely positioned to offer an amicus brief. Most relevant to this case, the ACLU filed comments with the federal government about the constitutionality of the federal rule at issue in this case. Further, as a membership organization, the ACLU has an interest in ensuring that the federal contraception rule is upheld, which will benefit its members.

For reasons more fully discussed in the proposed brief, amicus urges this Court to reject Plaintiff's claim that the contraception rule—which only requires Plaintiff to submit a self-certification form to its third party administrator stating that it objects to covering contraceptives in its group health plan—violates RFRA. Further, to permit Plaintiff to interfere with payments for contraceptive services provided by third-party health insurance corporations would permit it to interfere with an important employee benefit that promotes gender equality and thus discriminate against its women employees.

“[T]he court has broad discretion in deciding whether to permit amicus curiae participation in a case. . . .” McCarthy v. Fuller, No. 1:08-cv-994-WTL-DML, 2012 WL 1067863, at *1 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 29, 2012). “An amicus brief should normally be allowed when . . . the amicus has unique information or perspective that can help the court beyond the help that the lawyers for the parties are able to provide.” Ryan v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm’n, 125 F.3d 1062, 1063 (7th Cir. 1997) (Posner, J.). Here, the proposed amicus brief will provide a unique perspective drawing on amicus' long history of civil rights litigation.

Counsel for amicus has reached out to the parties concerning the filing of their amicus brief. Plaintiff neither consents to nor opposes the filing of the amicus brief, and Defendants take no position. The amicus brief has been submitted with this motion; if this motion is granted there will be no delay in the proceedings.

WHEREFORE, the ACLU requests that this Court accept and consider the Brief of Amicus Curiae the American Civil Liberties Union in Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction submitted with this motion.

Respectfully submitted this 12th day of December, 2013.

Respectfully submitted,

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) submits this brief to support the government’s argument that the final contraception rule promulgated by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”) under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (“ACA”) does not violate the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (“RFRA”). The right to practice one’s faith, or no religion, is one of our most treasured liberties and is of vital importance to the ACLU. For this reason, amicus routinely brings cases designed to protect the right to worship and express religious beliefs. The ACLU is also fiercely committed to fighting discrimination and inequality, including discrimination based on gender. Indeed, since 1972, the ACLU has worked to secure gender equality and to ensure that women and girls are able to lead lives of dignity, free from discrimination. An important component of gender equality is the ability of women to have full control of their reproductive lives and to be able to decide whether and when to have children.

Plaintiff's RFRA claim fails for several reasons. First, the contraception rule does not substantially burden Plaintiff's religious exercise. The rule requires only that Plaintiff send a two-page form to its third party administrator stating that it has religious objections to covering contraceptives. The onus is then on the third party administrator to pay for contraceptive services for the organizations' employees. Simple provision of this notice in no way constitutes a substantial burden on Plaintiff's religious exercise. Indeed, it is likely that Plaintiff provided such notice to its third party administrator before the announcement of the final rule, as health insurance policies issued or administered by companies like Meritain Health, Inc., a subsidiary of Aetna—Plaintiff's third party administrator—often included contraceptive coverage unless the organization specifically requested that such coverage be excluded.

Second, courts have long recognized that the right to religious liberty, while fundamental, does not give organizations or individuals carte blanche to interfere with the rights of others, to violate compelling government policies, or to impose their religious beliefs on others. This Court should reject Plaintiff's attempt to do the same here.

The contraception rule is a significant advancement in women's equality. Access to contraceptive care has enabled women to control their reproductive lives and futures, including permitting them to attain higher levels of education and to achieve greater economic equality. But, as Congress recognized, not all women have been able to access contraception due to cost barriers, and the contraception rule ensures that millions of women—including the hundreds of women who work for Plaintiff—have affordable access to this important healthcare. Allowing Plaintiff to prevent its third party administrator from paying for Plaintiff’s employees’ contraceptive services would permit Plaintiff to use its religious beliefs to disadvantage and discriminate against its female employees. Plaintiff’s claim should therefore be rejected.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The ACA requires that health insurance plans cover certain preventive services without cost-sharing. Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, Pub. L. No. 111-148, sec. 1001, § 2713(a), 124 Stat. 131, 131–32 (2010) (codified at 42 U.S.C.A. § 300gg-13). However, consistent with the historical practice of many health insurers, many preventive services that are unique to women were not included in the original preventive services coverage requirement. See 155 CONG. REC. S11,979, S11,987 (daily ed. Nov. 30, 2009) (statement of Sen. Barbara Mikulski) (noting that the ACA did not cover key preventive services for women). To address this inequality, Congress added the Women’s Health Amendment (“WHA”) to the ACA, which requires health insurance plans to cover additional preventive services that women need. § 2713(a)(4), 124 Stat. at 131. In passing the WHA, Senator Mikulski noted, “[o]ften those things unique to women have not been included in health care reform. Today we guarantee it and we assure it and we make it affordable by dealing with copayments and deductibles” 155 CONG. REC. at S11,988 (daily ed. Nov. 30, 2009) (statement of Sen. Barbara Mikulski). In particular, Congress intended to address gender disparities in out-of-pocket health care costs, which stem in large part from reproductive health care:

Not only do [women] pay more for the coverage we seek for the same age and the same coverage as men do, but in general women of childbearing age spend 68 percent more in out-of-pocket health care costs than men This fundamental inequity in the current system is dangerous and discriminatory and we must act. The prevention section of the bill before us must be amended so coverage of preventive services takes into account the unique health care needs of women throughout their lifespan.

155 CONG. REC. S12,021-02, S12,027 (daily ed. Dec. 1, 2009) (statement of Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand). Thus the WHA sought to equalize health insurance coverage for men and women.

In implementing the WHA, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”) looked to the Institute of Medicine (“IOM”), an independent, nonprofit organization, to provide recommendations as to services that should be covered. Among other things, IOM recommended that the covered preventive services include “the full range of Food and Drug Administration-approved contraceptive methods, sterilization procedures, and patient education and counseling for all women with reproductive capacity.” INST. OF MEDICINE, CLINICAL PREVENTIVE SERVICES FOR WOMEN: CLOSING THE GAPS 109–10 (July 2011) [hereinafter CLOSING THE GAPS]. On August 1, 2011, HHS adopted these recommendations, including the recommendation on contraceptive services. See 45

C.F.R. § 147.130(b)(1) (2013); Health Res. & Servs. Admin., U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., Women's Preventive Services: Required Health Plan Coverage Guidelines, available at <http://www.hrsa.gov/womensguidelines/>.

On June 28, 2013, HHS announced the final rule implementing the requirement that health insurance plans cover contraceptives. Under the final rule, religious nonprofit organizations that object to covering contraceptives do not have to cover contraceptives in their health plans if the following requirements are satisfied:

(1) The organization opposes providing coverage for some or all of the contraceptive services required to be covered . . . on account of religious objections. (2) The organization is organized and operates as a nonprofit entity. (3) The organization holds itself out as a religious organization. (4) The organization self-certifies . . . that it satisfies the criteria [in paragraphs (1)-(3)].

26 C.F.R. § 54.9815-2713A(a) (2013); 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-2713A (2013); 45 C.F.R. § 147.131 (2013). The self-certification form identified in the fourth requirement simply requires an individual authorized by the organization to certify that the organization meets the requirements and to provide his or her contact information. See CTRS. FOR MEDICARE & MEDICAID SERVS., CMS FORM NO. CMS-10459: COVERAGE OF CERTAIN PREVENTIVE SERVICES UNDER THE AFFORDABLE CARE ACT (2013) (attached hereto as Exhibit A).

The organization must then provide the self-certification to its issuer or, if the organization self-insures, to its third party administrator. Upon receiving the form, the issuer or third party administrator must either pay for, or arrange for payment of, contraceptive services. 26 C.F.R. § 54.9815-2713A(b)(2), (c)(2); 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-2713A(b)(2), (c)(2). The issuer or third party administrator will also notify the organization’s employees that it—not the organization—will be providing contraceptive coverage. 26 C.F.R. § 54.9815-2713A(d); 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-2713A(d). The final rule also explicitly prohibits the issuer or third party administrator from “imposing a premium, fee, or other charge, or any portion thereof, directly or indirectly on” the organizations or their employees for the separate contraception coverage. 26 C.F.R. § 54.9815(b)(2), (c)(2); 29 C.F.R. § 2590.715-2713A (b)(2), (c)(2).

ARGUMENT

I. THE FEDERAL CONTRACEPTION RULE DOES NOT SUBSTANTIALLY BURDEN PLAINTIFF’S RELIGIOUS EXERCISE.

RFRA prohibits the federal government from “substantially burden[ing] a person’s exercise of religion” unless the government demonstrates that application of the burden is justified by a compelling interest and is the least restrictive means of furthering that interest. Religious Freedom Restoration Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (2013). “In order to prevail on a claim under the substantial burden provision, a plaintiff must first demonstrate that the regulation at issue actually imposes a substantial burden on religious exercise.” Civil Liberties for Urban Believers v. City of Chicago (“CLUB”), 342 F.3d 752, 760 (7th Cir. 2003).¹ Only after the plaintiff establishes a substantial burden does the burden shift to the government to prove that the challenged policy is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling government interest. Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal, 546 U.S. 418, 428–29 (2006); see also Mack v. O’Leary, 80 F.3d 1175, 1180 (7th Cir. 1996), vacated on other grounds, 522 U.S. 801 (1997).

RFRA guards against only substantial—not minimal or abstract—burdens on religious exercise.² A substantial burden “is one that necessarily bears direct, primary, and fundamental responsibility for rendering religious exercise . . . effectively impracticable.” CLUB, 342 F.3d at 761; see also Garner v. Kennedy, 713 F.3d 237, 241 (5th Cir. 2013) (“In order to show a substantial burden, the plaintiff must show that the challenged action ‘truly pressures the adherent to significantly modify his religious behavior and significantly violate his religious beliefs.’”) (citing Adkins v. Kaspar, 393 F.3d 559, 570 (5th Cir. 2004)); Fortress Bible Church v. Feiner, 694 F.3d 208, 219 (2d Cir. 2012) (explaining that a substantial burden “must have more than a minimal impact on religious exercise”); Guru Nanak Sikh Soc’y of (2013); see also CLUB, 342 F.3d at 760 (“RLUIPAs legislative history indicates that it is to be interpreted by reference to RFRA and First Amendment jurisprudence.”).

² While RFRA does not define the term “substantial burden,” the legislative history shows that Congress intended “that term as used in the Act [to] be interpreted by reference to Supreme Court jurisprudence The term ‘substantial burden’ as used in the Act is not intended to be given any broader interpretation than the Supreme Court’s articulation of the concept of substantial burden on religious exercise.” 146 CONG. REC. S7,774, 7,776 (July 26, 2000) (Joint Statement of Sen. Hatch and Sen. Kennedy on the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Person Act of 2000); see also Westchester Day Sch. v. Vill. of Mamaroneck, 504 F.3d 338, 348 (2d Cir. 2007) (“Since substantial burden is a term of art in the Supreme Court’s free exercise jurisprudence, we assume that Congress, by using it, planned to incorporate the cluster of ideas associated with the Court’s use of it.”) (citing Midrash Sephardi, Inc. v. Town of Surfside, 366 F.3d 1214, 1226 (11th Cir. 2004)). Thus, references and citations to free exercise cases are instructive when interpreting the term “substantial burden” under RFRA.

Yuba City v. Cnty. of Sutter, 456 F.3d 978, 988 (9th Cir. 2006) (“a substantial burden on religious exercise must impose a significantly great restriction or onus upon such exercise”) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); Midrash Sephardi, Inc. v. Town of Surfside, 366 F.3d 1214, 1227 (11th Cir. 2004) (“substantial burden requires something more than an incidental effect on religious exercise”). The Seventh Circuit has further directed that “the adjective ‘substantial’ must be taken seriously.” World Outreach Conference Center v. City of Chicago, 591 F.3d 531, 539 (7th Cir. 2009). Otherwise, the term would be rendered “meaningless” and “the slightest obstacle to religious exercise, . . . however minor the burden it were to impose,” could trigger a RFRA violation. CLUB, 342 F.3d at 761. RFRA thus does not protect against “any incidental effect of a government program which may have some tendency to coerce individuals into acting contrary to their religious beliefs,” but rather applies only in those cases where government “puts substantial pressure on an adherent to substantially modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs.” Washington v. Klem, 497 F.3d 272, 279–80 (3d Cir. 2007).

That test plainly is not satisfied here. The challenged rule requires Plaintiff to do but one thing: inform its third party administrator that it wishes to exclude contraceptive coverage from its health insurance policy. That’s it. Plaintiff simply submits a form that exempts it from having to cover contraceptives in its group health insurance. It is Plaintiff’s third party administrator—Meritain Health, Inc., see Complaint [Doc. #1] ¶ 37—which must then pay for, or arrange for payments of, contraceptive services for Plaintiff’s employees. The delivery of payments for contraceptive services operates entirely outside of Plaintiff's business operations. Accordingly, the final rule does not "put[] substantial pressure on" Plaintiff to violate its belief that the use of contraception is sinful because all that is required of it is to notify its third party administrator that, consistent with its religious beliefs, it objects to covering contraception.³ Id. Indeed, the rule provides Plaintiff an opportunity to express its opposition to contraception by informing its third party administrator of its objection. Plaintiff is free to advocate against the contraception rule or contraceptive services in general in other ways, as well.

Other courts have rejected RFRA claims where, as here, the burden on religion is nonexistent or too slight to rise to the level of "substantial." For example, in Kaemmerling v. Lappin, the D.C. Circuit rejected a prisoner's RFRA challenge to the Bureau of Prison's ("BOP") policy of extracting DNA from federal inmates' bodily tissue. 553 F.3d 669, 678–80 (D.C. Cir. 2008). The plaintiff did not object to the collection of tissue samples, such as hair, saliva, or skin, but only to the subsequent extraction and analysis of DNA from that tissue sample. Id. The court held that BOP's policy did not substantially burden the plaintiff's religious exercise because the policy did not require the plaintiff to do anything that violated his religious beliefs, though he was nonetheless offended by the general policy. Id. The court observed:

[The plaintiff] cannot identify any “exercise” which is the subject of the burden to which he objects. The extraction and storage of DNA information are entirely activities of the FBI, in which Kaemmerling plays no role and which occur after the BOP has taken his fluid or tissue sample (to which he does not object). The government's extraction, analysis, and storage of Kaemmerling's DNA information does not call for Kaemmerling to modify his religious behavior in any way—it involves no action or forbearance on his part, nor does it otherwise interfere with any religious act in which he engages. Although the government's activities with his fluid or tissue sample after the BOP takes it may offend Kaemmerling's religious beliefs, they cannot be said to hamper his religious exercise because they do not “pressure [him] to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs.”

Id. at 679 (citing Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Employment Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 718 (1981)). The same is true here. The final rule distinguishes between the submission of the self-certification that provides notice of Plaintiff's religious objection and the separate payments for contraceptive services provided by third party health insurance companies. Plaintiff “plays no role” in the coverage of contraceptives. Id. Payment of contraceptive services “are entirely activities” of third party companies and Plaintiff is not forced to modify its behavior in any way. Id.

Similarly, in Goehring v. Brophy, students at a university objected to paying a generally applicable registration fee because it would be used to subsidize the school's health insurance program, which covered abortion care. 94 F.3d 1294, 1297 (9th Cir. 1996), overruled on other grounds by Navajo Nation v. U.S. Forest Serv., 479 F.3d 1024, 1033 (9th Cir. 2007). The court rejected the plaintiffs' RFRA and free exercise claims, reasoning in part that the health insurance subsidy is “distributed only for those students who elect to purchase University insurance. Furthermore, the plaintiffs are not required to accept, participate in, or advocate in any manner for the provision of abortion services.” Id. at 1300; see also Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 5 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (affirming district court’s holding that the ACA’s individual mandate to carry health insurance imposed only a de minimis burden on the plaintiffs’ religious belief that God will provide for their health), aff’g Mead v. Holder, 766 F. Supp. 2d 16, 42 (D.D.C. 2011), abrogated on other grounds by Nat’l Fed’n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 132 S. Ct. 2566 (2012); cf. Lyng v. N.W. Indian Cemetery Protective Ass’n, 485 U.S. 439, 450 (1988) (“incidental effects of government programs, which may make it more difficult to practice certain religions but which have no tendency to coerce individuals into acting contrary to their religious beliefs” do not trigger strict scrutiny). Plaintiff’s RFRA claim is even more attenuated than that in Goehring and must therefore be rejected.

Plaintiff is left with only one argument: Because the final rule requires them to submit a certification, which “triggers” payments for the possible, eventual use of contraceptives, the rule substantially burdens their religious exercise. See Doc. #1 ¶ 65; Mem. of Law in Support of Pl.’s Mot. for TRO and Mot. for PI [Doc. #18] at 8, 9, 36, 39, 48. In short, Plaintiff complains that because its employees will receive affordable access to contraceptives from separate health insurance companies, the rule substantially burdens Plaintiff’s religious beliefs. This contention merits little attention. By that same logic, the requirement that employers pay social security taxes for their employees could be said to substantially burden the religious exercise of an employer that opposes same-sex relationships because a gay or lesbian employee's partner may collect those social security benefits upon the death of his or her spouse. The use of contraception by other people may offend Plaintiff's religious beliefs, but that is not sufficient to support relief under RFRA. Courts have recognized that such "abstract injur[ies]" do not amount to burdens on the free exercise of religion. Tarsney v. O'Keefe, 225 F.3d 929, 936 (8th Cir. 2000) (taxpayers lack standing to assert free exercise challenge to expenditure of state funds to cover abortion care for low-income women because they could not show an injury from the use of state funds, as the taxpayers were "not affected by the allegedly unconstitutional expenditure") (citing Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 223 n.13 (1974)).

A RFRA violation simply does not occur when individuals have a religious objection to requirements imposed by the government on others, or to government action generally. The government action instead must substantially burden the plaintiff's religious exercise. To hold otherwise would give "each citizen . . . an individual veto to prohibit the government action solely because it offends his religious beliefs, sensibilities, or tastes." Navajo Nation v. U.S. Forest Serv., 535 F.3d 1058, 1063 (9th Cir. 2008); see also Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 699 (1986) ("The Free Exercise Clause simply cannot be understood to require the Government to conduct its own internal affairs in ways that comport with the religious beliefs of particular citizens.").

II. PLAINTIFF CANNOT USE ITS RELIGIOUS BELIEFS TO DENY ITS WOMEN EMPLOYEES THE PROTECTIONS OF LAWS AIMED AT PROMOTING GENDER EQUALITY.

In this case, Plaintiff's claims would have far-reaching consequences.

Plaintiff's call for an exemption would affect all of Plaintiff's employees and their dependents. An exemption would allow Plaintiff to impose its beliefs on others.

Fortunately, courts have consistently reassured this country that while the right to religious freedom is of paramount importance, it is not absolute and does not give individual claimants carte blanche to impose their religion on others, to harm others, or to deny others their rights and interests under the law. As the Supreme Court explained more than a century ago:

[T]he liberty secured by the Constitution of the United States to every person within its jurisdiction does not import an absolute right in each person to be, at all times and in all circumstances, wholly freed from restraint. . . . Real liberty for all could not exist under the operation of a principle which recognizes the right of each individual person to use his own, whether in respect of his person or his property, regardless of the injury that may be done to others.

Jacobson v. Commonwealth of Mass., 197 U.S. 11, 26 (1905) (emphasis added). This fundamental promise that our rights and freedoms are guaranteed to all, and cannot be infringed or violated by others, is one of the founding principles of this country. Abiding by this principle, Congress did not contemplate that RFRA would be used to deny other people their rights or benefits. Rather, RFRA's legislative history reflects Congress's intent to protect the individual's religious liberty from government intrusion without burdening third parties. See, e.g., 139 Cong. Rec. E1234-01 (daily ed. May 11, 1993) (statement of Rep. Benjamin L. Cardin) (citing as examples of government actions that infringe on the free exercise of religion: the refusal to bury veterans in “veterans’ cemeteries on Saturday and Sunday even if their religious beliefs require it”; the performance of autopsies “on individuals whose religious beliefs prohibit autopsies”; and the requirement that the Amish “display fluorescent orange emblems on their horse-drawn carriages”).

Even in cases where the Supreme Court has held that claimants were exempt from complying with laws that substantially burden their religious exercise, the Court has been careful to note that such exemptions did not harm others. In Sherbert v. Verner—a case that Congress cited in RFRA, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb(b)(1)—the Supreme Court granted a religious exemption from a state requirement for obtaining unemployment benefits, but noted that “the recognition of the appellant’s right to unemployment benefits under the state statute [does not] serve to abridge any other person’s religious liberties.” 374 U.S. 398, 409 (1963); see also O’Brien v. U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 894 F. Supp. 2d 1149, 1159 (E.D. Mo. 2012) (“RFRA does not protect against the slight burden on religious exercise that arises when one’s money circuitously flows to support the conduct of other free-exercise-wielding individuals who hold religious beliefs that differ from one’s own.”), stay granted pending appeal, No. 12-3357 (8th Cir. Nov. 28, 2012); cf. W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 630 (1943) (in excusing students from reciting the Pledge of Allegiance for religious reasons, noting that “the refusal of these persons to participate in the ceremony does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so”).⁴

The stakes are particularly high when the religious exercise claim conflicts directly with laws aimed at promoting equality and a religious exemption would foster discrimination. In times of social change, institutions have sought exemptions from civil rights laws based on religious beliefs, and courts have consistently rejected such attempts to injure others. For example, in the 1960s, some restaurants refused to serve African-Americans claiming religious opposition to “any integration of the races whatever.” Newman v. Piggie Park Enters., Inc., 256 F. Supp. 941, 944 (D.S.C. 1966), aff’d in relevant part and rev’d in part on other grounds, 377 F.2d 433 (4th Cir. 1967), aff’d and modified on other grounds, 390 U.S. 400 (1968). And after the adoption of civil rights measures, some Christian schools argued their religion would be burdened if they were forced to prohibit race segregation, claiming that “[c]ultural or biological mixing of the races is regarded as a violation of God’s command.” Bob Jones Univ. v. U.S., 461 U.S. 574, 583 n.6 (1983); see also Brown v. Dade Christian Schools, Inc., 556 F.2d 310, 311 (5th Cir. 1977) (Christian school that refused to admit African-American students claimed a

As the law advanced to prohibit unequal treatment based on gender, some Christian schools also resisted requirements that they provide equal benefits to men and women. See, e.g., Dole v. Shenandoah Baptist Church, 899 F.2d 1389, 1392 (4th Cir. 1990) (school officials paid married male teachers more than married female teachers because they believed the “Bible clearly teaches that the husband is the head of the house, head of the wife, head of the family”); EEOC v. Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d 1362, 1364 (9th Cir. 1986) (school offered unequal health benefits to female employees based on similar “head of household” religious tenet).

In each of these cases, entities and individuals invoked religious freedom to try to avoid compliance with laws designed to advance equality. Each time their claims were rejected. As these cases recognized, in our cosmopolitan nation, religious freedom does not give institutions or individuals license to deny others their rights, to ignore important laws, or to impose their religious beliefs on their employees.

Just as courts have held that religious belief cannot be used to deny others equal treatment or to interfere with their rights and interests, this Court should also hold that Plaintiff cannot use its religious beliefs to interfere with the rights of women to have affordable access to contraceptive services provided by third party insurance companies. The inclusion of contraceptive care in health insurance policies is an important step toward women's equality. Contraceptive care is fundamental women's health care, and 99% of women will use it at some point in their lifetime. Kimberly Daniels, William D. Mosher & Jo Jones, Contraceptive Methods Women Have Ever Used: United States, 1982–2010, 62 NAT'L HEALTH STATS. R. 1, 4 (2013). The ability to control whether and when to have children has enabled women to achieve greater academic, professional, and economic success. With the advent of contraceptives, women have been able to plan their reproductive lives and futures, which has been instrumental towards achieving gender equality. “[W]omen who can successfully delay a first birth and plan the subsequent timing and spacing of their children are more likely than others to enter or stay in school and to have more opportunities for employment and for full social or political participation in their community.” Susan A. Cohen, The Broad Benefits of Investing in Sexual and Reproductive Health, 1 GUTTMACHER R. ON PUB. POL'Y 5, 6 (2004). With greater professional advancement women have experienced a concomitant increase in economic equality and independence. Indeed, economists have estimated that contraceptives account for “roughly one-third of the total wage gains for women in their forties born from the mid-1940s to early 1950s . . . [and that] two thirds of these Pill-induced gains . . . can be attributed to increasing labor-market experience and another third is due to greater educational attainment and occupational upgrading.” Martha J. Bailey, Brad Hershbein & Amalia R. Miller, The Opt-in Revolution? Contraception and the Gender Gap in Wages, at 26–27 (Nat'l Bureau of Econ. Research, Working Paper No. 17922, 2012), available at <http://www.nber.org/papers/w17922>.

And yet the benefits of contraception cannot be fully realized so long as it remains unaffordable for millions of women. See Jennifer J. Frost, Stanley K. Henshaw & Adam Sonfield, Contraceptive Needs and Services: National and State Data, 2008 Update, GUTTMACHER INST. 3 (May 2010), available at <http://www.guttmacher.org/pubs/win/contraceptive-needs-2008.pdf>. Prior to the ACA and its implementing regulations, contraceptive care and other important preventive services that are unique to women were either excluded from health insurance coverage or had prohibitively high out-of-pocket costs, be it deductibles or co-pays. As the IOM noted, “[d]espite increases in private health insurance coverage of contraception since the 1990s, many women do not have insurance coverage or are in health plans in which copayments for visits and for prescriptions have increased in recent years.” CLOSING THE GAPS, supra, at 109; see also Su-Ying Liang, Daniel Grossman & Kathryn A. Phillips, Women’s Out-of-Pocket Expenditures and Dispensing Patterns for Oral Contraceptive Pills between 1996 and 2006, 83 CONTRACEPTION 528, 531 (June 2010) (finding that contraceptive co-pays can be so expensive that women can pay almost as much out-of-pocket as they would without coverage at all). These cost barriers are aggravated by the fact that women “typically earn less than men and . . . disproportionately have low incomes.” CLOSING THE GAPS, supra, at 19.

The costs associated with this healthcare also affect contraceptive choice, driving women to less expensive and less effective methods of contraception. See Peipert, 117 OBST. & GYN’Y at 1105–06 (reporting that many women do not choose long-lasting contraceptive methods, such as intrauterine devices (“IUDs”), because of the high upfront cost); Peipert et al., 120 OBST. & GYN’Y 1291. (showing that when women are provided contraceptives of their choice at no cost, more women choose highly effective, long-lasting contraceptive methods, such as IUDs, which are significantly more effective than alternative, less expensive methods). The contraception rule removes this cost barrier and ensures that women with health insurance are guaranteed affordable access to the most effective contraceptives that suit their medical needs.⁵

Moreover, the contraception rule contributes to the federal government’s goal of dismantling outmoded sex stereotypes. It offers women the tools to decide whether and when to become mothers and thus remedies the notion once endorsed by the government that “a woman is, and should remain the ‘center of home and family life,’” Nevada Dep’t of Human Resources v. Hibbs, 538 U.S. 721, 729 (2003)

⁵ Plaintiff claims that the contraception rule will not increase contraceptive use by making it more affordable “because the group of women with the highest unintended pregnancy rates (the poor) are not addressed or affected by the Mandate [because they are unemployed], and are already amply supplied with free or low-cost contraception”. Doc #18 at 31 (citing Helen M. Alvare, No Compelling Interest: The “Birth Control” Mandate and Religious Freedom, 58 VILL. L. REV. 379, 380 (2013)). Not only does Plaintiff’s statement play fast and loose with the law review article’s substance, but the article itself does not cite a single research study to support its assertions, and focuses on the unintended pregnancy rates of teenagers. Alvare, 58 VILL L. REV. at 402–04. In sharp contrast, the studies cited supra make clear that when cost is not a barrier, women choose a highly effective method of birth control that results in a lower unintended pregnancy rate. See Peipert et al., 120 OBST. & GYN’Y at 1293, 1295.

(quoting Hoyt v. Florida, 368 U.S. 57, 62 (1961)). In recent decades, Congress and the courts have made significant progress on furthering women’s equality. For example, in passing the Family Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”), Congress found that “denial or curtailment of women’s employment opportunities has been traceable directly to the pervasive presumption that women are mothers first, and workers second” and sought to disrupt that stereotype by requiring employers to give all employees—male and female—guaranteed leave to tend to family and medical needs. See Hibbs, 538 U.S. at 736 (quoting legislative history of FMLA).

However, more work towards full equality is still needed. The contraception rule marks an important step towards allowing women to participate equally in society. To permit Plaintiff to prevent third party health insurance companies from paying for contraceptive services for Plaintiff’s employees would undermine this important interest and allow it to discriminate against its women employees, contrary to a long line of cases. Plaintiff’s attempt to use the right to religious freedom as a sword, not a shield, must be rejected.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff’s motion for temporary restraining order and for preliminary injunction should be denied.
