COMPLAINANTS' RESPONSE TO RESPONDENTS' STATEMENT OF 1

UNDISPUTED FACTS ("RESP'S SOUF") 1

ARGUMENT 2

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED TO COMPLAINANTS. 2

A. RESPONDENTS DISCRIMINATED AGAINST COMPLAINANTS BECAUSE OF THEIR SEXUAL ORIENTATION. 2

B. RESPONDENTS' PROFESSED WILLINGNESS TO SELL OTHER BAKED GOODS TO COMPLAINANTS DOES NOT CURE THE ILLEGAL DISCRIMINATION AT ISSUE HERE. 8

C. RESPONDENTS MISAPPREHEND COLORADO LAW ON SAME-SEX RELATIONSHIPS AND ITS RELEVANCE. 10

II. RESPONDENTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE RESPONDENTS DO NOT HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO VIOLATE CADA. 11

A. ENFORCEMENT OF CADA DOES NOT VIOLATE RESPONDENT PHILLIPS' CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO FREE EXERCISE OF RELIGION. 11

1. CADA IS A NEUTRAL LAW OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY AND SHOULD NOT BE SUBJECT TO STRICT SCRUTINY. 13

2. RESPONDENT'S CLAIMS DO NOT INVOLVE HYBRID RIGHTS AND THUS DO NOT TRIGGER STRICT SCRUTINY. 15

3. CADA DOES NOT SUBSTANTIALLY BURDEN RESPONDENTS FREE EXERCISE RIGHTS. 17

4. CADA SURVIVES STRICT SCRUTINY ANALYSIS. 20

B. ENFORCEMENT OF CADA DOES NOT VIOLATE RESPONDENTS' CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO FREE EXPRESSION. 24

INTRODUCTION

Complainants David Mullins and Charlie Craig, by and through counsel, respectfully request that the Court grant their motion for summary judgment and deny the cross-motion for summary judgment filed by Respondents Masterpiece Cakeshop, Inc. and Jack Phillips. Complainants submit this reply brief in further support of their motion for summary judgment, combined with their opposition to Respondents' cross-motion for summary judgment, in accordance with C.R.C.P. 56, the Court's order dated October 2, 2013 and the Rules of Practice of the Office of Administrative Courts.

COMPLAINANTS' RESPONSE TO RESPONDENTS' STATEMENT OF UNDISPUTED FACTS ("RESP'S SOUF")

1-21. Complainants do not dispute any of the facts stated in paragraphs 1-21 of Resp's SOUF.

22-28. Complainants do not dispute any of the facts stated in paragraphs 22-28 of Resp's SOUF, and note that these paragraphs mirror statements in Complainants' Statement of Undisputed Facts (Compl's SOUF) recounting the interactions between the parties in July 2012, illustrating that there exists no genuine issue of material fact in this case.

29. Complainants do not dispute this statement but note that Complainant Mullins exclaimed his frustration with Respondents' discriminatory decision to refuse them service before exiting the shop.

30-31. Complainants do not dispute any of the facts stated in paragraphs 30 and 31 of Resp's SOUF, and note that these paragraphs mirror statements in Complainants' Statement of Undisputed Facts (Compl's SOUF) recounting the interactions between the parties in July 2012, illustrating that there exists no genuine issue of material fact in this case.

32. Complainants do not dispute any of the facts stated in paragraph 32 of Resp's SOUF.

33. Complainants do not dispute any of the facts stated in paragraph 33 of Resp's SOUF, and note that this paragraph mirror statements in Complainants' Statement of Undisputed Facts (Compl's SOUF) recounting the interactions between the parties in July 2012, illustrating that there exists no genuine issue of material fact in this case.

ARGUMENT

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED TO COMPLAINANTS.

The record shows that Complainants visited Respondent Masterpiece Cakeshop for the purpose of shopping for and potentially purchasing a cake for their wedding reception, but Respondent Phillips then informed them that Respondents would not sell Complainants the type of item they sought to purchase, solely because they were a same-sex couple who planned to marry each other and not an opposite-sex couple who planned to marry each other. Despite Respondents' protestations to the contrary, the undisputed facts of this case establish that Respondents refused service to Complainants because they are a gay couple, in violation of the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act ("CADA").

A. RESPONDENTS DISCRIMINATED AGAINST COMPLAINANTS BECAUSE OF THEIR SEXUAL ORIENTATION.

Respondent Phillips admits that Masterpiece Cakeshop is in the business of selling, among other things, wedding cakes, and that on July 19, 2012, he sat down at the "cake consulting table" in the shop with prospective customers who had expressed interest in purchasing a wedding cake. Resp. SOUF, ¶¶ 22-23; Compl. SOUF ¶ 3. He further admits that once Complainants Mullins and Craig explained that they wanted to purchase a cake for "our wedding," Phillips informed them that he was not willing to produce a wedding cake for their family. Resp. SOUF at ¶ 24. In other words, all Phillips needed to know to make his decision to deny Complainants service was that Complainants were two men planning to marry each other.

Respondent Phillips has also admitted that it is the policy of Masterpiece Cakeshop to categorically refuse to sell wedding cakes for same-sex couples. Id. at ¶¶ 26, 31. This is clearly discrimination "because of" sexual orientation. See Elane Photography, LLC v. Willock, 309 P.3d 53, 61 (N.M. 2013) (under New Mexico public accommodations law, photography studio illegally discriminated "because of...sexual orientation" because "[i]t provides wedding photography services to heterosexual couples, but it refuses to work with homosexual couples under equivalent circumstances.").

Respondent Phillips claims that he did not discriminate against Complainants "because of" their sexual orientation in that he would also deny service to a heterosexual individual who sought to order a cake that he knew to be intended for use at the wedding of her gay friends. Resp. Br. 8, n.2. While not at issue here, this hypothetical does not help Respondents' cause. Refusing to fill an order, for a type of product the business sells to other customers, based on the purchaser's intent to gift that product to gay friends getting married, would mean discriminating against the purchaser for his association with gay people, and thus would also violate C.R.S. § 24-34-601. See, e.g., Barrett v. Whirlpool Corp., 556 F.3d 502, 515 (6th Cir. 2009) (employer violated federal Civil Rights Act by penalizing white employees for their association with and advocacy for black co-workers); see also Elane Photography, supra at 62 (finding that "it does not help" photography studio's defense to argue that "it would have turned away heterosexual customers if the customers asked for photographs in a context that endorsed same sex marriage," such as a film shoot involving a fictional wedding).

Respondents also contend that they are not liable under CADA because they lacked the "required intent to discriminate". Resp. Br. 7. But the statute does not require a showing of "animus," "bigotry," or "malice" for Complainants to prevail on claims of public accommodations discrimination. C.R.S. § 24-34-601 et seq.; see also Bd. of Trustees of Univ. of Alabama v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 374 (2001) (Kennedy, J., concurring) ("Prejudice, we are beginning to understand, rises not from malice or hostile animus alone."); cf. TWA v. Thurston, 469 U.S. 111 (1985) (defendant employer's policy imposing adverse treatment on pilots over age 60 was discrimination "based on age" that violated the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, but did not trigger additional penalties as a "willful" violation based on statutory section that imposed specific intent requirement).

There is no case law in Colorado which holds that the "because of" language in C.R.S. § 24-34-601(2) requires a showing of intent. In fact, the Colorado Supreme Court has found similar language in the Colorado employment discrimination statute, 24-34-401(2) to be satisfied when the employment practice at issue had a disparate impact on women. Colorado Civil Rights Comm'n v. Travelers Ins. Co., 759 P.2d 1358, 1363 (Colo. 1988) (The failure to provide insurance coverage for pregnancy discrimination while providing male employees coverage for all conditions constitutes discriminatory conduct on the basis of sex.) [1]

Even assuming arguendo that Section 24-34-601(2) does require a showing of intent, Colorado law is clear that intent to discriminate "need not be proven by direct evidence, but may be inferred from the circumstances." Cunningham v. Department of Highways, 823 P.2d 1377 (Colo. Ct. App. 1991). In this case, Respondent Phillips concedes that his reason for turning away Complainants as prospective wedding cake customers was the fact that they wanted the cake for a same-sex wedding. Resp. SOUF, ¶ 27. That constitutes an admission of discrimination because of sexual orientation. Respondent Phillips cannot salvage his policy of refusing to sell wedding cakes for same-sex couples by claiming it is "not motivated by any type of animus toward, or bigotry against, gay people." Resp. Br. 9.

[1] The United States Supreme Court has followed a similar analysis when reviewing employment discrimination cases. See Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. v. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n, 462 U.S. 669, 682-83, 77 L. Ed. 2d 89, 103 S. Ct. 2622 (1983) (employment practice is discriminatory when it results in treatment which would be different but for that person's sex); Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 56 U.S.L.W. 4922, 101 L. Ed. 2d 827, 108 S. Ct. 2777 (1988) (superceded by statute on other grounds) (disparate impact analysis is applicable to subjective and objective criteria used in hiring and promotion decisions).

Respondents mischaracterize Colorado precedent regarding the standard Complainants must meet to demonstrate that they suffered illegal discrimination "because of" their protected class status. In Bodaghi v. Department of Natural Resources, 995 P.2d 288 (Colo. 2000, en banc), the Colorado Supreme Court found that a state agency violated the employment discrimination provision of CADA by intentionally discriminating against an Iranian-American employee because of his national origin. See C.R.S. § 24-34-402(1)(a) (employment provision including same "because of" language as the public accommodations provision). The Court deemed evidence in the administrative record, none of which reflected overt negativity toward the plaintiff's national origin or toward Iranians generally, adequate to support a finding of intentional and illegal discrimination, notwithstanding the employer's attempts to articulate non-discriminatory performance-based reasons for its adverse treatment of the plaintiff. Bodaghi at 303-04; see also Colorado Civil Rights Comm'n v. Big O Tires, 940 P.2d 397, 402 (Colo. 1997) (holding that record supported finding of intentional employment discrimination on the basis of race, in case where plaintiff demonstrated disparate treatment in disciplinary process but offered no direct evidence of intent to discriminate against her as an African-American). Here, the undisputed evidence is that Respondents have an explicit policy of disparate treatment based on sexual orientation – by refusing wedding cake services to same-sex couples. Although Respondents contend that this policy is not facially discriminatory on the basis of sexual orientation, further inquiry into the subjective intent behind their policy is not necessary to resolve this case.

Respondents' claim that their admitted refusal to take wedding cake orders for the weddings of same-sex couples does not constitute illegal discrimination resembles arguments rejected by the United States Supreme Court in past cases interpreting anti-discrimination laws. In Los Angeles Dep't of Water and Power v. Manhart, 435 U.S. 702, 707-08 (1978), the Court held that an employer's requirement that female employees make greater pension contributions than males constituted intentional discrimination in violation of the federal Civil Rights Act, notwithstanding the defendant's argument that such a policy was intended to foster equity (as data showed that female employees enjoyed longer lifespans). Similarly, in Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624, 648-55 (1998), the Court considered whether a dentist's refusal to treat an HIV-positive woman violated the public accommodations discrimination provision of the Americans with Disabilities Act. It held the decision to constitute intentional discrimination, noting that the dentist's "belief that a significant risk [of contracting HIV from the patient] existed, even if maintained in good faith, would not relieve him from liability." Id. at 649.

Respondents rely heavily on Bray v. Alexandria Women's Health Clinic, 506 U.S. 263 (1993), but to no avail. In Bray, the Court assessed whether the defendant organization's efforts to organize protest activities at abortion clinics rendered it a conspiracy subject to tort liability under the following Federal statutory provision:

> If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire or go in disguise on the highway or on the premises of another, for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws...

Id. at 267, quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3). Prior caselaw held that one of the required elements plaintiffs must prove to prevail on this claim was that "class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus [lay] behind the conspirators' action." Bray, 506 U.S. at 268, quoting Griffin v.

Breckenridge, 403 U.S. 88, 102 (1971). The Bray Court rejected plaintiffs' claims for two reasons: the lack of specific evidence of intentional animus against women, and its determination that "the disfavoring of abortion ...is not ipso facto discrimination against women." 506 U.S. at 272-75. As an initial matter, the present case substantially differs from Bray in that Complainants do not allege a conspiracy, or any other basis for tort liability, and accordingly have no obligation to show "class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus."

But in addition, the Bray Court's analysis of whether discrimination against women could be inferred from the facts of that case actually supports a finding that refusing wedding cake sales to same-sex couples planning to marry is discrimination against gay people.

> Some activities may be such an irrational object of disfavor that, if they are targeted, and if they also happen to be engaged in exclusively or predominantly by a particular class of people, an intent to disfavor that class can readily be presumed. A tax on wearing yarmulkes is a tax on Jews. But opposition to voluntary abortion cannot possibly be considered such an irrational surrogate for opposition to (or paternalism towards) women.

Id. at 270. Here, Respondents' policy of refusing to sell cakes for the weddings of gay and lesbian couples is akin to such an impermissible tax on yarmulkes, since same-sex weddings are "engaged in exclusively or predominantly" by gay people. See also Christian Legal Soc'y v. Martinez, 130 S.Ct. 2971, 2990 (2010) ("Our decisions have declined to distinguish between status and conduct" in identifying and assessing discrimination against gay people). The Bray Court also went on to note the involvement of many women on the anti-abortion side of the relevant policy debate and in defendants' activities specifically, as part of its basis for deeming efforts to oppose abortion to be distinct from tortious activities rooted in "class-based" anti-woman bias. 506 U.S. at 269-71. Here, in contrast, Complainants need only prove that they were individually subjected to discriminatory treatment, not that Respondents were motivated by a "class-based" discriminatory goal.

Respondents also argue that their policy of denying all same-sex couples the opportunity to purchase wedding cakes is not sexual orientation discrimination because the institution of marriage is not "inextricably tied to being gay in Colorado." Resp. Br. 10-11. But Respondents mischaracterize the "inextricable tie" that renders their policy illegal. Of course it is not the case that every gay individual in Colorado is or wishes to be married or that every same-sex couple in Colorado is or wishes to be married, particularly given the present requirement that Colorado same-sex couples must travel out of state in order to obtain a marriage license. However, Coloradans who marry members of the same sex are gay, lesbian, or bisexual, and weddings are celebrations of the very relationships that distinguish gay, lesbian, and bisexual people from heterosexuals. See Elane Photography, supra at 61 (refusing to photograph same-sex commitment ceremonies was illegal because "[t]o allow discrimination based on conduct so closely correlated with sexual orientation would severely undermine the purpose of the [public accommodations statute]"). In other words, same-sex marriage, is, by its very nature, "inextricably tied" to sexual orientation. Accordingly, a policy of denying wedding cakes to couples of the same sex who plan to marry or celebrate their relationship has the effect of denying a service to, and only to, people of particular sexual orientations, and violates CADA.

B. Respondents' Professed Willingness to Sell Other Baked Goods to Complainants Does Not Cure the Illegal Discrimination At Issue Here.

Respondent Phillips contends that he would be pleased to sell cookies, brownies, or a cake for a non-wedding occasion such as a birthday to Complainants and to other openly gay customers. Resp. SOUF ¶ 33; Affidavit of Jack Phillips ("Phillips Aff."), ¶ 87. Assuming this is true, it has no bearing on the illegality of Respondents' policy and practice of denying same-sex couples the ability to order cakes for their weddings[2] – a service that Respondents admit their business provides for opposite-sex couples. Exh. 2; Phillips Aff., ¶¶ 45, 48. As the New Mexico Supreme Court observed in Elane Photography, the basic principle behind public accommodations discrimination laws is that businesses holding themselves out as open to the public must make their full range of goods and services available on an equitable basis to all customers without imposing restrictions based on any protected status. 309 P.3d at 62 ("For example, if a restaurant offers a full menu to male customers, it may not refuse to serve entrees to women, even if it will serve them appetizers... Therefore, Elane Photography's willingness to offer some services to Willock does not cure its refusal to provide other services that it offered to the general public.") Refusing to sell wedding cakes is discrimination, whether or not the offending business makes other baked goods available on a nondiscriminatory basis.[3]

Historically, courts have treated restrictions on the ability of some customers to access particular goods or services as violating public accommodations discrimination laws, if such restrictions are based on membership in protected classes. See generally, e.g., Robinson v. Power Pizza, Inc., 993 F. Supp. 1462 (M.D. Fla. 1998) (granting injunction against restaurant that refused to deliver orders to predominantly African-American neighborhood and rejecting its policy of delivering orders from residents of that neighborhood at intermediate "drop off sites" as failing to abate policy of racial discrimination by a public accommodation in violation of federal law); Harvey v. NYRAC, 813 F. Supp. 206 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (denying summary judgment to defendant rental car purveyor where plaintiff alleged that because of her race she was not permitted to rent a "luxury" vehicle, in violation of New York anti-discrimination statutes, but was offered the opportunity to rent a different car model instead). By denying Complainants the opportunity to sample or purchase the type of item they wanted, Respondents violated C.R.S. 24-34-601, and Respondents' purported willingness to sell other items to Complainants does not cure this violation.

[2] As discussed supra at p. 3, Respondents' policy of refusing to sell cakes for the weddings of gay and lesbian Coloradans is illegal regardless of whether the person attempting to place the order is gay. Conversely, Respondent Phillips' claim that he would happily sell a wedding cake to a gay person for use in a heterosexual wedding is irrelevant even if true. Resp. Br. 8, n.2.

[3] By way of illustration, a bakery that willingly sold birthday and graduation cakes, cookies, and/or brownies to African-American customers would nonetheless be discriminating because of race and violating Colorado law if it refused to sell wedding cakes to or for interracial couples.

C. RESPONDENTS MISAPPREHEND COLORADO LAW ON SAME-SEX RELATIONSHIPS AND ITS RELEVANCE.

Respondents' also argue that their policy and practice of refusing to sell wedding cakes for same-sex couples are justified because of Colorado's constitutional and statutory provisions restricting civil marriage in Colorado to heterosexual couples. This assertion is similarly misguided.

Laws governing the issuance and recognition of marriage licenses in Colorado do not constrain gay Coloradans' right to participate equally in the market for retail goods and services, which the Colorado Legislature specifically affirmed when it added sexual orientation to CADA.[4] Nor do the eligibility standards for civil marriage impact all Coloradans' right (connected to constitutionally protected freedoms of association and expression) to throw parties celebrating their love, commitment to one another, and family relationships.[5] The record here

[4] The Colorado Civil Union Act, passed a few months after the incident of discrimination giving rise to this case, affirmed that the public policy of the state of Colorado is to treat gay couples and families with equal dignity and respect. See C.R.S. § 14-15-101 et seq. In the Civil Union Act, the legislature explained that one of its purposes was to "protect individuals who are or may become partners in a civil union against discrimination in employment, housing, and in places of public accommodation." C.R.S. § 14-15-102.

[5] Neither Complainants nor Counsel for the Complaint are asking Respondents to respect or recognize Complainants' marriage in any way or to treat them as married for any purpose, nor were Complainants seeking any such recognition when they approached Respondents seeking to purchase a cake in July 2012. Respondents' effort to draw support from Missouri case law regarding a man's ineligibility for financial benefits as the surviving domestic partner of another man is thus unavailing.

indicates Respondents have refused service both to gay Coloradans who were planning to marry legally in another jurisdiction around the same time, and to a couple who sought to order cupcakes and serve them at a "family commitment ceremony" not tied to a formally sanctioned wedding. See Compl. SOUF ¶ 5; Exh. D, pps. 2-4. In both instances, the conduct to which Respondents object is entirely legal and the refusal of service violates CADA.[6]

II. RESPONDENTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE RESPONDENTS DO NOT HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO VIOLATE CADA.

A. ENFORCEMENT OF CADA DOES NOT VIOLATE RESPONDENT PHILLIPS' CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO FREE EXERCISE OF RELIGION.[7]

Respondent Phillips makes the claim that the religious exercise clauses of the Colorado and United States Constitutions entitle him to thwart the purposes of CADA and to discriminate against fellow Coloradans based on their sexual orientation. See Resp.'s Br. at 35-44. In essence, Respondent claims that simply because his religion defines marriage as between a man and a woman, he and his for-profit secular business are above the law and are permitted to discriminate against same-sex couples in Colorado. While religious freedom is one of our most cherished liberties, it is not unlimited and cannot be used to harm others. Respondent's claim fails as a matter of law and must be rejected.

In Employment Division v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 885 (1990), the Supreme Court held that the Free Exercise Clause is not offended by a neutral law of general applicability. The Court explained, "the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a 'valid and neutral law of general applicability on the ground that the law proscribes (or prescribes) conduct that his religion prescribes (or proscribes).'" Id. Though that law may have "the incidental effect of burdening a particular religious practice" it "need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest." Church of Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 531 (1993); see also Swanson v. Guthrie Indep. Sch. Dist., 135 F.3d 694, 697-98 (10th Cir. 1998) ("a law (or policy) that is neutral and of general applicability need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest even if that law incidentally burdens a particular religious practice or belief.") (citing Lukumi Babalu, 508 U.S. at 531; U.S. v. Meyers, 95 F.3d 1475, 1481 (10th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1006 (1997)). Thus "a law that is both neutral and generally applicable need only be rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest to survive a constitutional challenge." Grace United Methodist Church v. City of Cheyenne, 451 F.3d 643, 649 (10th Cir. 2006). As explained infra pps. 21-22, Colorado has not just a legitimate interest, but a compelling one, in eradicating discrimination, and thus CADA undoubtedly survives rational basis review.

[6] As another illustration, a bakery that routinely sold Christmas cookies but refused to take orders for Hanukkah cookies would likely run afoul of the religious discrimination provision of CADA (even if it was willing to fill orders for items commemorating Purim, Sukkot, and other Jewish holidays). The bakery would not have a valid defense based on Colorado's recognition of Christmas but not Hanukkah as a legal holiday. C.R.S. § 24-11-101.
[7] It appears that the free exercise defense is asserted on behalf of Respondent Phillips alone. If Respondent Masterpiece Cakeshop, Inc. were to attempt to claim a free exercise violation resulting from enforcement of CADA, that claim would fail for all of the reasons stated infra.

There are still two kinds of claims that may trigger strict scrutiny under the Free Exercise Clause, and Respondent argues that both apply in this case. Under the first exception, laws that are not neutral and generally applicable, but target religious exercise, are invalid unless they satisfy strict scrutiny. Lukumi Babalu, 508 U.S at 546; see also Resp.'s Br. at 40-42. Under the second exception, so-called "hybrid claims" involving free exercise and another constitutional right can also trigger some version of strict scrutiny. See Smith, 494 U.S. at 881-82; see also Resp.'s Br. at 42. This case does not actually involve either exception, and therefore strict scrutiny is inappropriate.

1. CADA IS A NEUTRAL LAW OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY AND SHOULD NOT BE SUBJECT TO STRICT SCRUTINY.

Smith's requirements that laws be neutral and generally applicable are "interrelated." Lukumi Babalu, 508 U.S. at 531. "A law is neutral so long as its object is something other than the infringement or restriction of religious practices." Grace United, 451 F.3d at 649-50 (citing Lukumi Babalu, 508 U.S. at 533). Similarly, a law is generally applicable unless it selectively "impose[s] burdens only on conduct motivated by religious belief." Lukumi Babalu, 508 U.S. at 543. Here, there can be no serious question that CADA satisfies both requirements.

First, CADA is neutral because it was passed with the important and salutary purpose of protecting all Colorado residents and visitors from discrimination based on a wide range of protected characteristics, including sexual orientation. Specifically, "places of public accommodations" are barred from discriminating against "a person, directly or indirectly . . . because of . . . sexual orientation," among other protected characteristics. C.R.S. § 24-34-601. CADA applies to all such discrimination, regardless of the motive or reasoning underlying the discrimination.

Second, CADA is generally applicable because it does not target conduct motivated by religious belief. That Respondent happens to have violated CADA because of his religious beliefs does not mean that CADA is aimed at targeting his religious exercise. To the contrary, CADA is indifferent as to why a business or business owner might discriminate and the Free Exercise Clause does not provide Respondent any refuge. As the Supreme Court explained in Smith, "[w]e have never held that an individual's religious beliefs excuse him from compliance with an otherwise valid law prohibiting conduct that the State is free to regulate." Smith, 494 U.S. at 878-879.

Respondent goes on to argue that CADA's exemption for houses of worship fatally undermines its general applicability under Smith. Resp.'s Br. at 40. This is a curious argument, since the exemption for houses of worship was aimed at accommodating religious freedom, not targeting it. Indeed, this exemption only demonstrates how the legislature went out of its way to ensure that CADA would not target religious freedom. See Conestoga Wood Specialties Corp. v. Sebelius, 917 F. Supp. 2d 394, 410 (E.D. Pa. 2013) aff'd sub nom. Conestoga Wood Specialties Corp. v. Sec'y of U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 724 F.3d 377 (3d Cir. 2013) ("The fact that exemptions were made for religious employers does not indicate that the regulations seek to burden religion. Instead, it shows that the government made efforts to accommodate religious beliefs, which counsels in favor of the regulations' neutrality."); see generally Corp. of Presiding Bishop of Church of Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 334-38 (1987) (discussing purposes and effects of religious exemptions to nondiscrimination laws).

Respondent further argues that CADA's narrow exemption for public accommodations that restrict admission to individuals of one sex "if such restriction has a bona fide relationship to the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, or accommodations of such place of public accommodation" also threatens the law's general applicability. C.R.S. § 24-34-601(3); see also Resp.'s Br. at 41. This argument is of no avail. Narrow exemptions like this are common in public accommodations statutes and are aimed at permitting specialized institutions such as single-sex health clubs, schools, or medical facilities, to provide a service that is unique to one sex. See generally David S. Cohen, The Stubborn Persistence of Sex Segregation, 20 Colum. J. of Gender and Law 51, 93 n.176 (2011). They neither target religion, nor suggest that the law is not generally applicable.

Both the provision allowing sex segregation in limited circumstances and the provision exempting houses of worship clearly advance CADA's overall goals of eradicating discrimination and ensuring equal access to public accommodations for all Coloradans. In contrast, an exemption for Respondent would directly conflict with the purposes of CADA. Were Respondent's reasoning accepted, any law that contained an exemption for a secular purpose—no matter how reasonable or tailored—would automatically be subject to strict scrutiny. Such a rule would cause the exception to swallow the entire rule. But federal courts, including the Tenth Circuit, have expressly declined on several occasions to create such a per se rule. See Grace United, 451 F.3d at 651 ("Grace United seems to be asking us to adopt a per se rule requiring that any ... regulation which permits any secular exception satisfy a strict scrutiny test to survive a free exercise challenge. Consistent with the majority of our sister circuits, however, we have already refused to interpret Smith as standing for the proposition that a secular exemption automatically creates a claim for a religious exemption.") (citing Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, 356 F.3d 1277, 1297 (10th Cir. 2004)).

Even taken together, the statute's narrow exemptions are insufficient to trigger strict scrutiny under Smith and Lukumi Babalu. CADA, a comprehensive antidiscrimination law whose only exemptions further its purposes of preventing discrimination and ensuring minorities' full participation in society, is both neutral and generally applicable, and thus should not be subjected to a strict scrutiny standard.

2. RESPONDENT'S CLAIMS DO NOT INVOLVE HYBRID RIGHTS AND THUS DO NOT TRIGGER STRICT SCRUTINY.

Respondent Phillips next argues that strict scrutiny is proper because his religious exercise claim involves hybrid rights. See Resp.'s Br. at 42. At the outset, "[t]he hybrid rights doctrine is controversial. It has been characterized as mere dicta not binding on lower courts, criticized as illogical, and dismissed as untenable." Grace United, 451 F.3d at 656 (citing Knight v. Conn. Dep't of Pub. Health, 275 F.3d 156, 167 (2d Cir. 2001); Kissinger v. Bd. of Trs. of Ohio State Univ., 5 F.3d 177, 180 (6th Cir. 1993)). Although courts, including the Tenth Circuit, are skeptical of the hybrid rights exception, the Tenth Circuit does recognize the exception, but only "where the plaintiff establishes a 'fair probability, or a likelihood,' of success on the companion claim." Axson-Flynn, 356 F.3d at 1295. See also Swanson, 135 F.3d at 699 ("[W]e believe that simply raising such a [hybrid-rights] claim is not a talisman that automatically leads to the application of the compelling-interest test. We must examine the claimed infringements on the party's claimed rights to determine whether either the claimed rights or the claimed infringements are genuine.").

Respondents have utterly failed to "present[] a colorable independent constitutional claim" under the Free Speech or Takings Clauses and therefore his claims do not trigger the hybrid rights exception. Grace United, 451 F.3d at 656. As explained, supra pps. 24-34, Respondents' free speech claim fails because enforcement of CADA targets commercial conduct, not inherently expressive activity, and does not trigger Constitutional protections against compelled speech.

Respondent Philips's takings claim is equally specious, supported by no case law, and based solely on the bare assertion that if he must comply with CADA, he will be "forced, by the Government, to cease designing and creating wedding cakes altogether. . . . This . . . amounts to a taking of Jack's property." Resp.'s Br. at 42. A taking occurs when the government transfers private property to the state. Stop the Beach Renourishment, Inc. v. Fla. Dep't of Env. Protect'n, 130 S. Ct. 2592, 2601 (2010). A regulatory taking "'aims to identify regulatory actions that are functionally equivalent to the classic taking.'" Id. (quoting Lingle v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 544

U.S. 528, 539 (2005)). The Supreme Court has identified several factors relevant to evaluating regulatory takings.

> Primary among those factors are 'the economic impact of the regulation on the claimant and, particularly, the extent to which the regulation has interfered with distinct investment-backed expectations.' In addition, the 'character of the government action'—for instance whether it amounts to a physical invasion or instead merely affects property interests through 'some public program adjusting the benefits and burdens of economic life to promote the common good'—may be relevant in discerning whether a taking has occurred.

Lingle, 544 U.S. at 538-39 (quoting Penn Central Transp. Co. v. City of New York, 438 U.S. 104, 124 (1978)). Here, it is nonsensical to argue that enforcing CADA amounts to a regulatory taking. Importantly—and perhaps obviously—CADA imposes no costs on Respondent's business and any adverse impact would arises only from Respondent's voluntary refusal to comply with CADA and his hypothetical future decision to cease or curtail business operations rather than to serve all customers equally. Because neither his free speech nor his takings claim is viable, Respondent has failed to present a hybrid rights claim.

3. CADA DOES NOT SUBSTANTIALLY BURDEN RESPONDENTS FREE EXERCISE RIGHTS.

Prohibiting Respondent—who has made the voluntary decision to open a secular, for-profit bakery that serves the general public—from discriminating against customers on the basis of sexual orientation does not substantially burden Respondent's religious exercise.

"An inconsequential or de minimis burden on religious practice does not rise to . . . [the] level" of substantial. Kaemmerling v. Lappin, 553 F.3d 669, 678 (D.C. Cir. 2008); see also Fortress Bible Church v. Feiner, 694 F.3d 208, 219 (2d Cir. 2012) (explaining that a substantial burden "must have more than a minimal impact on religious exercise") (citation omitted); Guru Nanak Sikh Soc'y of Yuba City v. Cnty. Of Sutter, 456 F.3d 978, 988 (9th Cir. 2006) ("a substantial burden on religious exercise must impose a significantly great restriction or onus upon such exercise") (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); Midrash Sephardi, Inc. v. Town of Surfside, 366 F.3d 1214, 1227 (11th Cir. 2004) ("substantial burden requires something more than an incidental effect on religious exercise").[8] Similarly, laws "'which may make it more difficult to practice certain religions but which have no tendency to coerce individuals into acting contrary to their religious beliefs' do not constitute substantial burdens on the exercise of religion." Thiry v. Carlson, 78 F.3d 1491, 1495 (10th Cir. 1996) (quoting Lyng v. Nw. Indian Cemetry Prot. Ass'n, 485 U.S. 439, 450-51 (1988)). Thus, a substantial burden on religion does not arise from "any incidental effect of a government program which may have some tendency to coerce individuals into acting contrary to their religious beliefs," but rather, occurs only in those cases where government puts "substantial pressure on an adherent to substantially modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs." Washington v. Klem, 497 F.3d 272, 279-80 (3d Cir. 2007).

Here, CADA does not force Respondent Phillips to support, endorse, or participate in a same-sex wedding. All that CADA requires is that when Respondent is operating his business he, like all other business owners in the state, must treat all Coloradans who enter his business with dignity and respect. This does not amount to a substantial burden on religious exercise. As one court explained in rejecting the claim of a restaurant owner religiously opposed to "any integration of the races whatever,"

> Undoubtedly defendant ... has a constitutional right to espouse the religious beliefs of his own choosing, however, he does not have the absolute right to exercise and practice such beliefs in utter disregard of the clear constitutional rights of other citizens. This court refuses to lend credence or support to his position that he has > a constitutional right to refuse to serve members of the Negro race in his business establishments upon the ground that to do so would violate his sacred religious beliefs.

[8] Kaemmerling and other cases cited herein were decided under statutes that prohibit government-imposed "substantial burdens" on religion, including the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA"), 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc(a)(1) (2013), and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA"), 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (2013), just as the Supreme Court's pre-Smith free exercise cases did. Therefore, such cases are instructive when determining what amounts to a "substantial burden" on religious exercise.

Newman v. Piggie Park Enters., Inc., 256 F. Supp. 941, 945 (D.S.C. 1966), aff'd in relevant part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 377 F.2d 433 (4th Cir. 1967), aff'd and modified on other grounds, 390 U.S. 400 (1968). This Court should likewise reject Respondent's claim of a license to discriminate. Respondent Phillips remains entirely free to continue believing that the Bible limits marriage to between a man and a woman, to display political signs opposing marriage equality laws, to espouse his religious beliefs regarding marriage, and to continue opposing same-sex marriage in his personal life. What he cannot do is pick and choose which customers he will serve based on sexual orientation while operating a business subject to Colorado law.

Moreover, any alleged burden on Respondent's religious exercise applies to his commercial activities as a baker. See Swanner, 874 P.2d at 283. As the Supreme Court has explained, "[w]hen followers of a particular sect enter into commercial activity as a matter of choice, the limits they accept on their own conduct as a matter of conscience and faith are not to be superimposed on the statutory schemes which are binding on others in that activity." United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 261 (1982).

That Respondent Phillips views his baking as a service to God does not alter the analysis. See, e.g., Resp.'s SOUF ¶ 21. Complainants do not question the sincerity of Respondent's religious beliefs or the fervor with which he holds them. But the subjective inquiry as to whether a religious belief is sincerely held is separate and apart from the objective, legal question as to whether his religious exercise is substantially burdened by CADA. See, e.g., Kaemmerling, 553 F.3d at 679 (court "accept[s] as true the factual allegations that [the plaintiff's] beliefs are sincere and of a religious nature—but not the legal conclusion, cast as a factual allegation, that his religious exercise is substantially burdened . . ."); Goehring v. Brophy, 94 F.3d 1294, 1299 n.5 (9th Cir. 1996) (even if plaintiffs' beliefs were sincerely held, "it does not logically follow . . . that any governmental action at odds with these beliefs constitutes a substantial burden"), abrogated on other grounds by City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997). The objective facts in this case demonstrate that CADA imposes, at most, only an incidental burden on Respondent's religious exercise.

4. CADA SURVIVES STRICT SCRUTINY ANALYSIS.

While strict scrutiny does not apply for the reasons set forth above, and the Colorado courts have not ruled on whether the Colorado Constitution requires strict scrutiny for religious exercise claims, CADA nonetheless satisfies even that higher level of review.

Even assuming arguendo that CADA would be subject to a strict scrutiny analysis, the law would nonetheless survive strict scrutiny because it furthers a "compelling state interest" and is "narrowly tailored" to that interest. Lukumi Babalu, 546 U.S. at 430-31. The Supreme Court has held that a wide range of government interests are sufficiently compelling as to deny a religious exemption. See, e.g., Goldman v. Weinberg, 475 U.S. 503, 510 (1986) (holding that military's interest in "uniformity" was sufficiently compelling to deny religious exemption to Jewish serviceman who wanted to wear a yarmulke); Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 603 (1961) (state's interest in "improving the health, safety, morals and general well-being of citizens" was sufficiently compelling to deny religious exemption to Jewish storeowners from Sunday closing law); Lee, 455 U.S. at 260 ("broad public interest in maintaining a sound tax system" justified denial of religious exemption from social security tax); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 165 (1944) ("interests of society to protect the welfare of children" were sufficiently compelling to enforce child labor laws against Jehovah's Witnesses distributing religious pamphlets on street).

In light of these precedents, there can be little question that Colorado, like other states, has "a compelling interest in eradicating discrimination in all forms."[9] EEOC v. Miss. Coll., 626 F.2d 477, 489 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 453 U.S. 912 (1981) abrogated on other grounds ; see also Russell v. Belmont Coll., 554 F. Supp. 667, 677 (M.D. Tenn. 1987) ("this nation has a strong public policy against discrimination ... in all forms"); Swanner, 874 P.2d at 282 (Alaska 1994) (noting that state has an interest in "preventing acts of discrimination based on irrelevant characteristics"); cf. Bob Jones Univ. v. United States, 461 U.S. 574, 604 (1983) ("Th[e] governmental interest [in eradicating racial discrimination] substantially outweighs whatever burden denial of tax benefits places on petitioners' exercise of their religious exercise."). Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 624 (1984)(Minnesota's anti-discrimination laws reflect the "[s]tate's strong historical commitment to eliminating discrimination and assuring its citizens equal access to publicly available goods and services" and "plainly serves compelling state interests of the highest order.")

The United States Supreme Court has recognized the "serious and personal harms" that result from discrimination, which "both deprives persons of their individual dignity and denies society the benefits of wide participation in political, economic, and cultural life." Id. at 625; see also Bd. of Dirs. Of Rotary Int'l v. Rotary Club of Duarte, 481 U.S. 537, 549 (1987) ("public accommodations laws plainly serv[e] compelling state interests of the highest order")(internal [9] Contrary to what Respondent argues, the relevant inquiry is not whether Colorado has a compelling interest in forcing Respondent to bake a wedding cake for Complainants. Resp.'s Br. at 43. Respondent's characterization trivializes the profound dignitary harm that people—including Complainants Craig and Mullins—experience when they are turned away because of who they are. The government interest in this case is no more about forcing Respondent to bake a cake for Complainants than Newman was about forcing the Piggie Park restaurant owners to serve barbecue to African-Americans.
