CLASS ACTION

[PROPOSED] REVISED SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

INTRODUCTION

1. Plaintiffs are deaf and hard of hearing individuals<sup>1</sup> who are incarcerated in the Georgia Department of Corrections' prisons and/or supervised by the Georgia Department of Community Supervision. Plaintiffs seek to represent a class of similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing individuals.

2. Defendants have denied, and continue to deny, Plaintiffs, and those similarly situated to Plaintiffs, equally effective communication required by the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Rehabilitation Act. Because most Plaintiffs have extremely limited English, Plaintiffs and similarly-situated deaf and hard of hearing individuals require qualified sign language interpreters, or other auxiliary aids and services, for effective communication access. Defendants deny Plaintiffs this legally-required communication access at every stage of their incarceration, parole, and probation.

3. Plaintiffs often begin their incarceration after a criminal legal process in which they were denied sign language interpreters, or other necessary communication aids, when they were arrested and interrogated, when they were meeting with their public defenders, and when they were persuaded to accept plea agreements. As a result, Plaintiffs enter prison having had little or no opportunity to understand the charges against them or even the lengths of their sentences.

4. In prison, Defendants deny Plaintiffs communication access to such basic information as the rules of the prison and the steps needed to become eligible for probation or parole. Defendants deny communication access at disciplinary hearings and for medical appointments. Defendants deny communication access to religious, educational, and vocational programs. Defendants even deny communication access to courses designated as a pre-requisite for release. As a consequence, Plaintiffs have no information on what rules they are to follow. They suffer arbitrary discipline, punishments, and abuses. Plaintiffs with life-threatening illnesses go without treatment. Plaintiffs have no access to the support and programming that would allow them to shorten their sentences and better prepare for a return to society.

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs use the terms deaf and hard of hearing to refer to individuals with hearing levels or hearing loss that qualify as "disabilities" under the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Rehabilitation Act. Plaintiffs use the term "Deaf" to refer to individuals who are deaf from birth or childhood and who use sign language as their primary means of language. The phrase "deaf and hard of hearing" includes Deaf individuals.

5. These communication barriers continue for any Plaintiff released on probation or parole. Defendants deny Plaintiffs equally effective communication in meetings with their parole and probation officers, local sheriffs, and in reviewing the conditions of parole or probation. Defendants insist that Plaintiffs must procure, and pay for, their own interpreters if they want to understand the steps they must take and the rules they must follow while under supervision. Consequently, Plaintiffs are often cited for probation violations and returned to prison. In short, because Defendants refuse to provide communication access as required by federal law, deaf and hard of hearing people are incarcerated more frequently, suffer harsher prison conditions, remain in prison longer, and return to prison faster.

6. Without sign language interpreters and other auxiliary aids and services, Plaintiffs have no information about the prison's rules and procedures. When deaf and hard of hearing inmates then fail to follow the unexplained rules and procedures, Defendants subject them to disciplinary hearings. At the disciplinary hearings, they are not only further denied sign language interpreters or other auxiliary aids and services needed to understand why they are there, but they are also routinely handcuffed behind their backs, so they cannot even gesture, or write notes in their own defense. As a result, Plaintiffs and those similarly situated are more likely to be accused of rule violations, to face disciplinary proceedings, and to serve longer sentences because of their supposed “poor behavior.”

7. When Plaintiffs, including similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates, end up in a segregated setting such as solitary confinement, they experience particularly egregious deprivations. Plaintiffs miss meals, showers, appointments, and medications because these are announced using only aural cues which are not accessible to Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs have no ability to communicate with nearby guards, counselors, or other inmates, thereby causing them more extreme isolation.

8. When Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates attend meetings with prison counselors and staff, Defendants routinely deny them sign language interpreters and other auxiliary aids and services. The same is true for religious services, vocational and educational programming, including programming required for release, and important meetings and programs regarding reentry. These failures, too, make deaf and hard of hearing inmates more isolated, and make it more likely that they serve longer sentences and face unnecessary obstacles both in prison and upon release.

9. Without sign language interpreters and other auxiliary aids and services, deaf and hard of hearing inmates are denied basic health care. Plaintiffs cannot understand communications during appointments with health care professionals. They cannot participate effectively in mental health therapy. They cannot communicate regarding serious and even life-threatening health conditions. They miss out on aural announcements related to health care, such as pill call. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates are further denied hearing-related care, such as hearing aids, cochlear implants, and appointments with hearing specialists. These failures not only violate the guarantees of the Americans with Disabilities Act, 42 U.S.C. § 12131, et seq.

(“ADA”) and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, 29 U.S.C. § 701 (“Section 504”), but also the guarantees of the U.S. Constitution.

10. Because American Sign Language (“ASL”) is a distinct language, with its own syntax and grammar, Deaf inmates who use ASL as their primary language typically have extremely limited English and cannot read, fill out, or understand written documents without auxiliary aids and services. When Deaf inmates receive documents from the prison system, or from the Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles (“GBOP”), they are unable to understand these documents because their contents are not explained in ASL. (This is akin to giving documents in Japanese to a person who understands only English.) Without translation assistance, Deaf inmates are unable to respond appropriately to these documents. Deaf inmates are thus deprived of the information necessary to effectively participate in the parole and reentry process. They often do not understand their sentences, their parole eligibility dates, how to maximize their chances for parole, or how to prepare for release. They do not recognize or understand how to correct clerical and other errors in their sentence computations, putting them at risk of longer incarceration due to such errors. These same barriers make the internal grievance procedure maintained by the Georgia Department of Corrections (“GDOC”) inaccessible to Deaf inmates.

11. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates are also denied equal access to phone calls. Telephone calls are a primary means by which incarcerated individuals stay in touch with family, friends, and attorneys. Studies show that incarcerated persons who maintain family ties are more likely to leave incarceration and succeed in the community. But deaf and hard of hearing inmates are denied access to videophones, TTYs, captioned telephones, and amplified telephones. This denial of phone access is particularly difficult for the many Deaf inmates who are not able to write or read letters.

12. Emergency planning and preparation also exclude Plaintiffs and similarly situated inmates who are deaf and hard of hearing. The prison system does not include effective visual alarms, bed-shaking devices, and evacuation planning for deaf and hard of hearing inmates. Other failures to provide reasonable modifications for Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates are detailed below, including the absence of adequate policies or training for prison guards, wardens, and other personnel to understand the needs of such inmates.

13. These communication barriers continue when Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates are under the supervision of the Georgia Department of Community Supervision (“GDCS”), either for a term of supervision following incarceration or in lieu of incarceration. People subject to supervision by GDCS may be subject to the requirements of probation, parole, and/or the sex offender registry. Failure to comply with the requirements of state supervision can result in incarceration, sometimes for periods of years.

14. Defendant GDCS fails to ensure effective communication access to Plaintiffs and similarly situated people subject to state supervision. Meetings with probation officers, parole officers, and Sex Offender Registration Team officers are routinely held without interpreters or auxiliary aids and services. Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing supervisees are unable to understand the conditions and requirements of their supervision. These requirements are often complex, specific, and subject to change. For example, on information and belief, some Georgia counties impose a daily curfew on people subject to probation, while other counties have no such obligation. But because there is no effective communication with deaf and hard of hearing supervisees, Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing people under supervision often do not understand the terms of their release and supervision, putting them at risk of unknowingly violating these requirements. Ultimately, the communication failures make it more likely that Plaintiffs will return to prison.

15. Plaintiffs seek, on behalf of themselves and those similarly situated, injunctive relief, declaratory relief, attorneys' fees and costs, and additional remedies.

<sup>3</sup> Speech-reading, sometimes referred to as "lip-reading," is the practice of detecting words on a speaker's mouth based on facial and mouth movements. This is almost never an effective means of communication for people who are deaf or hard of hearing. Only about 30% of all speech is visible on the lips. Georgia Tech Research Institute, Deafness and Hardness of Hearing Fact Sheet, https://accessibility.gtri.gatech.edu/assistant/acc\_info/factsheet\_deaf\_hoh.php. Moreover, speech-reading demands fluent comprehension of English and is highly dependent on, inter alia, the proximity and eye contact between the speaker and the speech-reader, a quiet and well-lit environment, the speaker's ability to articulate or their accent, and presence of facial hair or masks that block the speaker's lips.

FACTS

46. Defendants have violated, and continue to violate, federal laws protecting persons with disabilities in Georgia Department of Corrections ("GDOC") custody, subject to Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles ("GBOP") authority, and subject to Georgia Department of Community Supervision ("GDCCS") supervision. Defendants' conduct violates the Americans with Disabilities Act ("ADA"), the Rehabilitation Act, and the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. Violations of law include:

(A) Failure to provide equally effective communication (including qualified interpreters, captioning, and other communication access) within the prisons and on supervision, including but not limited to the following important programs and activities: classification; orientation; disciplinary proceedings; vocational, educational, and religious programs; meetings with prison counselors and staff; reentry planning meetings; information relayed verbally to all inmates, such as pill calls, meal times, and meetings; important letters, memos, and documents provided by Defendants to Plaintiffs that cannot be understood by

Plaintiffs because of their disabilities; and meetings with probation, parole, and sex offender officers after release;

(B) Failure to provide equally effective communication at medical, mental health, and dental appointments, and failure to provide constitutionally minimum standards of medical, dental, and mental health treatment;

(C) Failure to provide equally effective telecommunication with family, friends, and attorneys outside of the prison, including videophones, captioned telephones, and amplified telephones;

(D) Unreasonable use of solitary confinement and/or administrative isolation on incarcerated people who are deaf and hard of hearing and for whom the isolation and deleterious effects of solitary are magnified;

(E) Unreasonable use and placement of handcuffs without regard to the needs of deaf and hard of hearing incarcerated people to use their hands to communicate in American Sign Language (“ASL”) and through gesturing or writing notes;

(F) Failure to include deaf and hard of hearing individuals in emergency planning by failing to ensure visual alarms, vibrating alarms, and accessible evacuation planning; and

(G) Failure to maintain an accessible, adequate administrative exhaustion process, including by: maintaining a grievance system that is inaccessible to Deaf inmates who cannot read and write English; refusing to provide grievance forms to incarcerated people; refusing to accept completed grievances; refusing to provide incarcerated people with copies of submitted grievances, responses, appeal forms, or grievance numbers; threatening retaliation against incarcerated people who file grievances; and interfering with the exhaustion process by providing falsely back-dated, untimely responses to grievances and falsely back-dated, untimely extensions to the 40 days in which the prison is required to respond to grievances.

A. Failure To Provide Equally Effective Communication (Including Qualified Interpreters, Captioning, And Other Communication Access) Within The Prisons And Under Supervision

47. Effective communication with officers, counselors, wardens, and other prison staff is essential for incarcerated people. People in the custody of GDOC are wholly dependent on GDOC for medical, dental, educational, mental health, employment, and religious needs, among other services. Individuals in the custody of GDOC are also dependent on GDOC and its staff for all of their basic daily needs, including food, exercise, and safety.

48. Effective communication with probation officers, parole officers, and sex offender registration officers is crucial for people on state supervision. People supervised by GDOS are at risk of re-arrest and re-incarceration if they do not comply completely with the complex requirements of their supervision. People who do not fully understand the requirements of their supervision, including people who cannot understand the written requirements, or people who are unable to communicate effectively with their supervision officers, are at heightened risk of arrest and incarceration simply because of communication failures.

49. People who are deaf at birth or who become deaf early in life and who learn ASL as their first language typically use ASL as their primary or only language. American Sign Language is a complete and complex language distinct from English – it is not simply English in hand signals – with its own vocabulary and rules for grammar and syntax. Many Deaf individuals who use ASL as their primary language have extremely limited written English. For these Deaf individuals, qualified ASL interpreters are necessary to ensure effective communication with an individual who is not proficient in ASL.<sup>8</sup> Speech-reading, fingerspelling, or ad hoc gestures are not effective communication for people who communicate in ASL. Notes and other writings are almost never an effective communication tool for Deaf individuals, particularly for complex and important topics such as medical care, mental health care, prison rules and requirements, disciplinary hearings, or parole and probation requirements.

50. For deaf and hard of hearing individuals who are fluent in English – often those who lose their hearing later in life – written communication in English may be an effective communication tool. Some late-deafened individuals are not proficient in ASL and prefer to communicate in writing. For these people, all information must be conveyed clearly in writing for communication to be effective. A scribbled note with only a few words summarizing the content of an hour-long class, for example, is not effective communication. Effective communication for deaf and hard of hearing individuals who are fluent in written English includes Communication Access Realtime Translation (“CART”). CART provides real-time typed transcriptions of spoken communication, similar to the technology used by court reporters.

51. For deaf and hard of hearing individuals who are fluent in both ASL and English, written notes may sometimes be effective for simple interactions. But most deaf and hard of hearing people who are bilingual in ASL and English still require ASL interpreters for complex or important interactions.

<sup>8</sup> A qualified interpreter is one who is able to communicate effectively, accurately, and impartially, both receptively and expressively, using any necessary specialized vocabulary. For some Deaf individuals, qualified interpretation requires a team of interpreters, including both an ASL interpreter (who is hearing and who can interpret from English to ASL), and a Certified Deaf Interpreter (“CDI”). A CDI is a Deaf person who works with the ASL interpreter to facilitate effective communication.

52. Speech-reading is virtually never an effective communication method for a deaf or hard-of-hearing individual. Fewer than 30% of English words can be distinguished reliably by speech-reading.

53. Defendants, through their policies and practices, fail to provide communication access for deaf and hard of hearing individuals in Defendants' custody and control and under Defendants' supervision. Defendants routinely fail to provide qualified interpreters, CART, and other auxiliary aids and services, for deaf and hard of hearing people in custody and under supervision.

54. Defendants' failures to ensure communication access deprive deaf and hard of hearing people under Defendants' control of effective communication in critical situations, including medical and mental health appointments, administrative hearings, classification reviews, and probation and parole meetings. Defendants also deprive deaf and hard of hearing inmates in GDOC custody of necessary auxiliary aids and services, such as qualified interpreters and CART, during important prison programs, such as educational classes, rehabilitative courses, and religious services – some of which are prerequisites to release.

Classification

55. On entry into GDOC custody, inmates are sent to Georgia Classification Prison. While there, Defendants conduct "diagnostic processing" for inmates. On information and belief, inmates at Georgia Classification Prison are assessed to determine what security level and prison they will be assigned. On information and belief, an incarcerated person's security classification is considered by GBOP in determining whether to grant parole to an individual. Communication is crucial at the classification stage to determine what programs, medical care, services, or facilities an individual will need. But Defendants fail to provide communication access for deaf and hard of hearing inmates at Georgia Classification Prison, preventing them from expressing their preferences, explaining their needs, or ensuring that they are classified in the least restrictive setting that is appropriate.

Orientation

56. On arrival at a new prison, Defendants provide orientation information to explain the rules, policies, procedures, and opportunities (including jobs, classes, and religious programs) available at the prison. Communication is critical at this stage so that incarcerated people understand information relevant for classification, including needs, skills, and interests, and for prison staff to communicate the rules, expectations, and requirements of prison. Without this information inmates cannot know how to follow the rules, avoid disciplinary sanctions, and participate in the programs they need to access parole and to succeed in the community upon their release. But the content of orientation is not effectively communicated to Plaintiffs and other similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing incarcerated people. The content of orientation is conveyed either verbally or in writing. On information and belief, there have never been interpreters at any prison orientation in GDOC, with the exception of orientation at Central State Prison (“CSP”) following the mass transfer of deaf and hard of hearing inmates – including several Plaintiffs – in 2018.

57. For example, Mr. Doe arrived at a facility and did not receive any effective communication to understand how the facility worked. He did not know how to get a job, earn privileges, take classes, or add his family to his visit list.

Disciplinary Proceedings

58. Defendants impose disciplinary measures, including solitary confinement and commissary restrictions, on inmates in their custody. On information and belief, an incarcerated person's disciplinary history is a factor taken into account by Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles ("GBOP") in determining whether an individual will be released on parole. On information and belief, an incarcerated person's disciplinary history is also considered if he may be eligible for transfer to a lower-security facility.

59. On information and belief, the disciplinary process begins with a conversation between an officer who believes there has been an infraction and the incarcerated person believed to have broken a rule. After this, the officer may "write up" a disciplinary report ("DR") on the inmate who the officer believes violated a prison rule. The write-up sometimes leads to a DR hearing, where the incarcerated person and the complaining officer each have an opportunity explain their side of the situation. The prison officials overseeing the DR hearing can impose sanctions including solitary confinement, official reports in the inmate's file, commissary restrictions, and other punishments.

60. On information and belief, officers who believe an inmate has violated a rule typically discuss the incident with the inmate and anyone else who may have witnessed the incident before writing a DR. But because Defendants fail to provide interpreters and other communication access, Plaintiffs and other similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates are not able to resolve issues informally through conversation. If the officer does write a DR, the written report describes the incident, and the incarcerated person must sign the report. The DR includes a space for the incarcerated person to explain their defenses or why the accusation is incorrect. But Defendants fail to provide interpreters to explain these documents to incarcerated people who are Deaf and not proficient in written English. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates are therefore unable to understand the accusations against them or explain in writing any response, denial, or explanation of the incident.

61. If the incident is escalated to a DR hearing, the incarcerated person is routinely handcuffed during the proceedings, and cannot sign, gesture, or write notes. Interpreters, CART, and other communication aids are not provided during the hearings. As a result, deaf and hard of hearing inmates are unable to understand the charged rules violations or effectively participate by explaining their side of the story.

62. For example, in November 2017, Defendant Perry called Mr. Green into his office for a meeting. Mr. Green was handcuffed behind his back for the duration of the meeting. There were no ASL interpreters present. Defendant Perry wrote a note accusing Mr. Green of violating prison rules. With his hands cuffed behind his back, Mr. Green could not communicate with even rudimentary notes or hand gestures to defend himself.

63. For example, in September 2017, Mr. Moore was charged with “failure to follow instructions” and a violation of rules. He was handcuffed behind his back for the duration of the DR hearing. There were no ASL interpreters present. Mr. Moore was completely unable to communicate at the hearing. With his hands cuffed behind his back, he could not even communicate through simple written notes or hand gestures. Mr. Moore was not able to explain that he was wrongly charged and that the prison guard had mixed him up with another bald man. During the hearing, officers laughed at Mr. Moore’s inability to communicate. Mr. Moore was punished with a 90-day suspension of store access, and the disciplinary incident remains on his record.

64. For example, in late 2017, Mr. Wooden received a written DR when an officer believed that Mr. Wooden was wearing a stolen t-shirt. Mr. Wooden’s first language and preferred method of communication is ASL. But Mr. Wooden can understand some written English. Mr. Wooden knew that CSP would not provide an interpreter, so he asked the officer to write notes on a piece of paper so that Mr. Wooden would have at least some understanding of the conversation before the disciplinary process escalated. The officer became visibly angry and shouted at Mr. Wooden, refusing to write notes or use an interpreter to find out what happened. Instead, the officer wrote a DR for Mr. Wooden, alleging both theft of the t-shirt and “insubordination” based on Mr. Wooden’s request for communication access.

65. For example, in 2016, Mr. Coen was subjected to a DR hearing. His hands were cuffed behind his back for the duration of the hearing. The handcuffs were on too tightly, causing Mr. Coen pain and injury. He was unable to communicate, or understand the proceedings. He then spent a week in solitary confinement as a result of the hearing, which he could not understand or participate in.

66. For example, in 2017, Mr. Doe received a DR. Mr. Doe was wrongfully accused of an infraction that he did not commit. But because he is not proficient in English, Mr. Doe was not able to understand or defend himself with regard to the written DR. Mr. Doe was denied equal access to defend himself and explain the accusation against him because of Defendants’ failure to provide equal communication access.

Educational, Vocational, And Religious Programs

67. Defendants provide educational, vocational, counseling, and religious programs for individuals in GDOC custody. Incarcerated people who participate in educational, vocational, and counseling programs earn Performance Incentive Credits (“PIC Points”), which can reduce prison terms by up to 12 months.<sup>9</sup> On information and belief, some inmates are required to attend specific classes, such as substance abuse, anger management, and other “risk reduction” courses and programs as a condition of parole or probation. Defendant GDOC states that its programs “are critical to Governor Nathan Deal’s criminal justice reform and the prison reentry initiative,” and that in-custody educational, religious, vocational, and risk reduction programs are designed to “prepar[e] offenders for their return to society as productive citizens.”<sup>10</sup> But Defendants repeatedly and knowingly fail to provide communication access, including interpreters and CART, to allow individuals who are deaf and hard of hearing to participate in these important programs.

68. For example, Mr. D. Smith attempted to take a GED class for years at CSP but was repeatedly denied because there was no interpreter for the class. He was repeatedly told that he could not attend because there were no interpreters. Mr. A. Smith also attempted to attend a GED class numerous times in recent years. After Mr. A. Smith filed grievances with the support of Plaintiffs’ attorneys, Augusta State Medical Prison (“ASMP”) provided an ASL interpreter for the first few classes, but then the interpreter stopped attending classes. Mr. A. Smith does not know why the interpreter stopped coming to classes. He was no longer able to participate in the GED class at ASMP after the interpreter stopped attending.

69. For example, Mr. Herrera believes that a condition of his release on parole was successful completion of a specific risk-reduction class. But Mr. Herrera was repeatedly rejected from this class because ASMP refused to provide interpreters. Mr. Herrera’s tentative parole month was scheduled for July 2016, but he did not get parole. Mr. Herrera believes that he was denied parole in part because he had not completed any classes. Because GBOP shares information with potential parolees in writing only, Mr. Herrera does not have any idea whether he was considered for parole, or whether GBOP provided explanations for denying him parole. Mr. Herrera believes that Defendants’ failure to ensure effective communication access may have caused him to spend 22 months longer in prison by contributing to his denial of parole in 2016.

70. For example, Mr. Cobb is eligible for parole in 2019. At his sentencing, he was told that he would have to participate in specific classes during incarceration, including a Residential Substance Abuse Training (“RSAT”) program, for parole eligibility. There were no interpreters for any classes at ASMP. The GDOC ADA Coordinator told Mr. Cobb that he did not need to take the classes because they were not available to him because he is Deaf. But Mr. Cobb’s counselor told him he did need to take these classes. In March 2018, Mr. Cobb was transferred to Johnson State Prison (“JSP”) to participate in the RSAT program. Mr. Cobb spent five weeks at JSP waiting for an interpreter. After five weeks without an interpreter, Mr. Cobb was transferred back to CSP. He still does not know whether the RSAT class is required, why he was transferred from JSP back to CSP, or if he will be denied parole because of GDOC’s failure to provide interpreters.

71. For example, Mr. Harris wishes to attend religious services. But GDOC officials frequently refuse to allow Mr. Harris to even go to the chapel. Officers pretended not to understand Mr. Harris when he put his hands in a prayer gesture in an attempt to communicate his desire to go to church. When Mr. Harris was permitted to go to the chapel at ASMP, GDOC did not provide qualified interpreters for any religious programs.

Meetings And Conversations With In-Custody Counselors And Staff

72. Incarcerated people need to share and receive information frequently with prison staff, including counselors and guards, for a wide range of reasons, including: to request enrollment in work, classes, or religious programs; to report abuse; to seek information about prison rules or regulations; to seek medical or mental health care; and to learn of family emergencies or other critical information from family outside the prison.

73. Defendants consistently fail to provide interpreters or other auxiliary aids or services such as CART or amplification for meetings between prison employees and deaf and hard of hearing inmates. This causes communication failures on a daily basis for virtually every Plaintiff.

74. For example, Mr. Wooden was subject to disciplinary proceedings because there were no interpreters at CSP. Without interpreters, a CSP guard misconstrued Mr. Wooden's attempts to communicate as insubordination and swearing, when in fact Mr. Wooden was merely attempting to request pen and paper and to explain that the t-shirt he was wearing was not stolen.

75. For example, Mr. Moore has had no ASL interpretation at his meetings with his counselors. He believes that his sentence computation is incorrect and that he is serving longer than he should be because of this error. Although he has requested interpretation at numerous meetings, the prison has repeatedly refused to provide interpreters. Mr. Moore cannot communicate effectively with his counselors or prison staff to explain the errors in his sentence, or if he has questions, if there are emergencies, or if the staff needs to share important information with him.

76. For example, Mr. Harris was transferred from ASMP to CSP in February 2018. He had an interpreter at his first meeting with his new counselor, and at a brief meeting in May 2018. But his counselor, Counselor Chambers, has refused to provide interpreters at any other meetings, forcing Mr. Harris to attempt to communicate by written notes. Mr. Harris has extremely limited English. He wants to get a job, but he cannot communicate effectively with his counselor to learn what jobs are available or sign up for a job.

Employment

77. Communication barriers also interfere with the ability of Plaintiffs to participate on an equal basis in employment. Defendants fail to provide communication access for Plaintiffs to learn their jobs and communicate effectively with their supervisors.

78. For example, Mr. D. Smith worked in the kitchen at CSP on the serving line. Mr. D. Smith had no way to communicate with his supervisors in the kitchen. He was blamed for misunderstandings and for the conduct of other, hearing, inmates. Mr. D. Smith could not communicate with prison staff to explain any misunderstandings, ask questions, or receive information about his work. In December 2017, Mr. D. Smith wrote a grievance requesting interpreters so that he could communicate with prison staff at his job. In response to his grievance, prison staff met with Mr. D. Smith, with an interpreter, and explained to him that he would be moving from working on the line to scrubbing pots and pans because there was less communication needed in that position.

79. For example, Mr. Herrera worked in the kitchen at ASMP. ASMP failed to provide interpreters, so Mr. Herrera could not communicate with prison staff supervising his work. Mr. Herrera was frequently accused of stealing and other infractions by other inmates who knew that Mr. Herrera could not communicate with staff in the kitchen. These accusations put Mr. Herrera at increased risk of disciplinary charges and harsh consequences, such as solitary confinement.

80. For example, Mr. Green works five days a week in the kitchen. Mr. Green has no way to communicate with his supervisors, and they have no way to communicate with him. On many occasions, prison staff have yelled at Mr. Green and threatened him with disciplinary action, apparently because he does not follow their spoken orders, which he cannot hear. He has also been blamed for problems at work, and he has no way to communicate his side of the story.

Parole And Reentry Planning

81. Defendant GDOC provides a variety of resources, courses, tools, and information to help incarcerated people prepare for successful release and reentry into the community. Defendant GDOC recognizes the importance of reentry programs, which are designed to “provide[] effective opportunities for offenders to achieve positive change and to be a more pro-social contributor to society.”<sup>11</sup> Reentry planning includes: The Offender Parolee Probationer State Training Employee Program (“TOPPSTEP”) to assist inmates in getting important documents like identification and birth certificates before release; assistance with Social Security Administration Pre-Release procedures to apply for or to renew Supplemental Security Income (“SSI”) or Social Security Disability Insurance (“SSDI”) benefits; and meetings with GDOC and GDSCS staff to understand the conditions and requirements of release, including probation, parole, or sex offender status.

82. Defendants fail to ensure effective communication of critical pre-release information for deaf and hard of hearing inmates. Defendants do not provide interpreters or other auxiliary aids and services to understand written information from GBOP about parole eligibility, parole determinations, or during meetings with GDOC counselors before release.

83. For example, Mr. Herrera was released in May 2018. He is now supervised by GDSCS. Defendants did not provide interpreters for meetings with GDOC staff in advance of his release. When Mr. Herrera was released, he did not know what the conditions of his release were, though he knew that he would be subject to specific and complicated restrictions.

Defendants provided an uncertified, unqualified interpreter to discuss reentry planning for Mr. Herrera at one meeting shortly before his release. This interpreter refused to interpret the document outlining the conditions of Mr. Herrera's release. The interpreter told Mr. Herrera that the conditions were very long and that Mr. Herrera should read the conditions himself. Mr. Herrera cannot read English. Defendants did not provide interpreters to assist Mr. Herrera in renewing his SSI benefits effective upon his release, or assisting Mr. Herrera in understanding how to access housing, physical or mental health services, or other post-release support.

84. For example, Mr. Green has been incarcerated for more than 20 years. During this time, he has had virtually no way to communicate with prison staff. Mr. Green believes he is eligible for parole, but because there is no effective communication in CSP, and because his sentence and conditions are only available in written form, he has no way to confirm whether or when he may be eligible. He has no idea how the parole process works or how to participate effectively. He has received numerous letters and papers from GBOP and the prison during his incarceration, but he does not understand English and does not know what these papers say. Defendants have not provided ASL interpreters to Mr. Green to allow him to understand the documents he has received about his incarceration, his sentence, and the parole process. Mr. Green does not know when he could be eligible for parole. Mr. Green does not know what he needs to do to maximize his chances of parole. Mr. Green does not know whether he has already been considered for parole in the 21 years he has already served in prison.

85. Defendants' failure to ensure communication access in parole and reentry planning makes it more likely that deaf and hard of hearing people will serve longer sentences because they lack access to the parole process, and face re-incarceration because Defendants failed to plan for reentry and to prepare inmates with tools they need to succeed after release.

Information Communicated Verbally To All Inmates In Prison

86. Every day, prison staff share information with all inmates verbally, announcing mealtimes, pill calls, the beginning and end of work shifts, the beginning and end of daily count, laundry calls, and shakedowns. This information is conveyed almost exclusively through speech and auditory cues. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates almost never receive this information. As a result, they miss meals, medication, appointments, laundry, and work. Hearing inmates have audio alarms to wake them up in the morning, but the prisons refuse to provide visual or vibrating alarms for deaf and hard of hearing inmates. Deaf and hard of hearing incarcerated people are sometimes woken up by their cellmates or guards banging on the beds, or sometimes they are not woken up and miss breakfast or work.

87. For example, in April 2018, Mr. Cobb, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Herrera were in their dorm at CSP when prison staff announced an inspection of the dorm. There was no visual or tactile notification of this information, so Mr. Cobb, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Herrera were unaware of the inspection. When Defendant Warden Perry arrived for the inspection, he yelled at all three Plaintiffs for failing to prepare for the inspection. The Warden punished Mr. Cobb, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Herrera for failing to respond to information that was conveyed only verbally – and was thus completely inaccessible to all three men – by ordering them to wash windows.

88. For example, Mr. Cobb was unable to change his bedsheets for months because he could not hear when officials at ASMP announced that inmates should bring their dirty sheets to the laundry and get clean sheets.

89. For example, Mr. A. Smith works in the early morning shift but frequently misses meals or arrives late because he does not wake up on time. He does not have a vibrating or flashing visual alarm, so he only wakes up if another inmate shakes his bed to wake him.

Information Conveyed In Writing

90. Defendants provide a wide range of information to incarcerated people in writing. This information is inaccessible to most Deaf Plaintiffs, and other similarly situated Deaf people, who do not use or understand English.

91. For example, Mr. J. Smith was held in protective isolation for eight months at ASMP. During this time, he attempted to request transfers to other facilities, where he could be safely in the general population. The transfer request process was only available in writing. Mr. J. Smith has extremely limited written English, but he attempted to fill out the paperwork as well as he could. ASMP failed to provide an interpreter to help Mr. J. Smith fill out this document. Mr. J. Smith received a letter with information about his transfer request and instructions about what he needed to do to pursue this request. But since he could not read the English in the letter, he did not understand this information and could not continue to pursue his transfer request.

Meetings With Community Supervision Officers

92. Upon release from prison, or in lieu of incarceration, many individuals are subject to community supervision, whether through probation, parole, or the sex offender registry. People subject to supervision face swift re-arrest and long periods of re-incarceration if they do not comply fully, completely, and promptly with the requirements of supervision programs and the requests of supervision officers. But deaf and hard of hearing people on state supervision are denied effective communication to understand the terms and requirements of their supervision. People who are deaf and hard of hearing are at heightened risk of the most severe consequence – re-incarceration – simply because GDCS fails to ensure effective communication with the people it controls.

93. For example, when Mr. Woody was released from prison, he was required to meet with multiple GDCS officers on a regular basis. These officers had different locations and hours. Each officer had strict requirements with which Mr. Woody was required to comply. The requirements of probation changed shortly after he was released – he was initially required to attend an inpatient substance abuse program, but a judge removed this requirement because no programs would accept a Deaf person. In addition, Mr. Woody had to receive approval in advance before signing a lease; he could only move into homes with certain specific characteristics; he could not live in certain counties or take certain jobs; and he had to keep all of his supervision officers apprised of a wide range of life events. In one county, Mr. Woody had a curfew, but in another he did not. Any mistake or failure to comply with each and every one of these (changing) requirements would jeopardize Mr. Woody’s freedom.

94. But GDCS and its officers repeatedly refused to provide effective communication for Mr. Woody to understand the conditions and requirements of his supervision. He repeatedly wrote notes stating that he needed an ASL interpreter, but GDCS officials brushed him off, refusing to provide interpreters and insisting on note-writing, even after Mr. Woody explained that this was not effective.

95. GDCS officers held a few meetings with an interpreter for Mr. Woody after Plaintiffs’ attorneys contacted the GDCS departments to inform them of their obligations under disability rights laws. But for the majority of meetings with GDCS officers – those that the GDCS officer unilaterally deems “insignificant” – GDCS still refuses to provide interpreters.

96. For example, Mr. Herrera was released from prison on May 21, 2018. On release, Mr. Herrera was required to register at separate GDCS facilities in two counties. He was denied qualified interpreters at both offices. In one county, when Mr. Herrera requested an interpreter, a state official erroneously stated that Mr. Herrera was responsible for hiring and paying for his own interpreters. The officer told Mr. Herrera and one of Plaintiffs' attorneys that "the government is not responsible for providing . . . an interpreter," and stated that, if Mr. Herrera had questions about the terms of his supervision, "he'll have to have somebody that can ask those questions for him or he's got to be able to write them out in English. The official language of this state and this country is English."

97. Even with the presence and advocacy of an attorney, Mr. Herrera had to appear at eight separate meetings in two counties over three days to meet the complicated requirements of simply registering with GDCS to begin his supervision. Failure to navigate this complex process precisely, promptly, and in the required sequence would subject him to immediate re-arrest and 25 more years in prison.

B. Failure To Provide Effective Communication And To Meet Minimum Constitutional Requirements In Medical, Dental, And Mental Health Care

98. Defendants are responsible for the medical, dental, and mental health care of all individuals incarcerated by GDOC.

99. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates who use ASL require qualified interpreters to communicate effectively with healthcare staff in custody. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates who rely on written English communication require CART to communicate effectively with healthcare staff in custody. But GDOC repeatedly fails to provide interpreters, CART, or other auxiliary aids and services at healthcare appointments.

100. Further, Defendants have failed to ensure hearing-related medical care, such as appointments with hearing specialists and appointments related to hearing aids and cochlear implants.

101. For example, Mr. Green has endured numerous medical encounters without effective and meaningful communication access. He has never had an ASL interpreter at any medical appointment over 21 years. He has had major medical interventions, including knee surgery and a procedure in which a small camera was inserted into his groin, all without interpreters. He never learned why the painful procedure in which the camera was inserted into his groin was performed. He vomited and then passed out during this procedure.

102. For example, Mr. Moore used a cochlear implant before he was incarcerated. When the cochlear implant is functioning, Mr. Moore's hearing is improved. But he is not allowed to use it in CSP. Instead, he is forced to use a hearing aid. The hearing aid helps a little, when it is working. But guards broke Mr. Moore's hearing aid during a shakedown of his cell. The prison has refused to fix Mr. Moore's hearing aid, or to permit him to use his cochlear implant. Mr. Moore has been left with no hearing assistance.

103. For example, Mr. D. Smith began experiencing significant vision loss in one eye during his incarceration. He also has significant ankle pain that makes it difficult and painful to stand and walk. Mr. D. Smith has had numerous medical appointments without the assistance of an interpreter, at both CSP and ASMP, to assess his vision loss and ankle pain. In February 2018, Mr. D. Smith was transported from CSP to ASMP for a medical appointment, but when he arrived at ASMP, he learned that there was no interpreter available and was transported back to CSP the same day without seeing a doctor. In March 2018, Mr. D Smith was again transported to ASMP for an appointment related to his vision loss and upcoming eye surgery. Upon arrival at ASMP, he was again informed that there was no interpreter available. Despite Defendants' failure to provide effective communication access, and Defendants' recognition that Mr. D. Smith requires an ASL interpreter to communicate, medical staff at ASMP proceeded with Mr.

D. Smith's March 2018 medical appointment without an interpreter. Mr. D. Smith does not understand the medical plan, prognosis, or next steps related to his vision loss because of Defendants' failure to provide communication access.

104. On March 7, 2018, Mr. Herrera sought medical care for shortness of breath. When he arrived at sick call before 9 a.m., there were no interpreters available. Defendants requested that another incarcerated person, who is also deaf but has some residual hearing, interpret for Mr. Herrera. This incarcerated person attempted to assist Mr. Herrera while Defendants weighed him and took his blood pressure. Defendants wrote this confidential medical information, including weight, height, and blood pressure, on a post-it note and stuck it to Mr. Herrera's ID tag on his chest. Mr. Herrera then waited another three hours, without interpreters or any information about what was happening. Defendants' medical staff informed Plaintiffs' attorneys, who happened to be present, both that an interpreter was "on the way" and – in direct contradiction – that prison staff communicate with Deaf inmates using the "language line," apparently a form of Video Remote Interpretation ("VRI"), but that it had been "broken" for two weeks. Defendants' medical staff stated to Plaintiffs' attorneys that there is "no back-up plan" for when remote interpretation services are unavailable. Despite his high blood pressure, shortness of breath, and obvious distress, Defendants failed to provide any meaningful communication to Mr. Herrera on March 7, 2018, and on the following days, when he repeatedly returned to sick call.

105. On May 21, 2018, Mr. J. Smith had a scheduled mental health appointment. This was his first appointment with a counselor, although he is supposed to see a counselor every other week. Several meetings had been cancelled because there was no interpreter. On May 21, 2018, CSP again failed to provide an interpreter for Mr. J. Smith's appointment. As of June 18, 2018, CSP has never provided an interpreter at a single mental health appointment for Mr. J. Smith.

106. In June 2018, Mr. Shields was transported to Georgia Diagnostic Prison for a kidney test. He believes the test was related to diabetes. But Georgia Diagnostic Prison refused to provide an interpreter at this appointment. Mr. Shields was not able to communicate effectively, and the appointment was confusing. CSP failed to provide an interpreter at a scheduled follow-up appointment at CSP, where Mr. Shields expected to learn the results of this kidney test. The appointment was cancelled and Mr. Shields does not know the results of this test.

107. Mr. Henderson takes psychotropic medications in prison. He meets with a psychiatrist every month to discuss his medications and mental health. He has never received CART interpretation or audio amplification devices to ensure effective communication at these important meetings.

108. Mr. A. Smith has a prosthetic leg. His prosthetic requires regular adjustments to avoid pain, abrasions, or infections. But Mr. A. Smith has never had interpreters at his appointments to assess his prosthetic. He has also been denied regular appointments for prosthetic maintenance, causing pain, loss of balance, and increased falls.

C. Unequal Access To Telecommunications

109. Access to telecommunications is extremely important to incarcerated individuals. As the federal government has recognized, “Telephone privileges are a supplemental means of maintaining community and family ties that will contribute to an inmate’s personal development.” 28 C.F.R. § 540.100. Staying connected to the outside world is also imperative in preparing inmates to make a positive transition back to the outside world once their sentences are complete.

110. Defendant GDOC provides hearing individuals in its custody regular access to telephones to communicate with family, friends, attorneys, and other individuals outside of prison. On information and belief, hearing inmates can use telephones on a daily basis.

111. Because of their disabilities, most deaf and hard of hearing individuals in GDOC's custody cannot use standard telephones to communicate with individuals outside of prison.

112. Defendant GDOC possesses teletypewriters ("TTY") at some of its prisons. TTY is an outdated technology that does not provide equally effective communication for most deaf and hard of hearing people. TTY is a device equipped with a keyboard and display screen to enable deaf and hard of hearing individuals to make and receive text-based telecommunication via telephone lines. TTY requires the deaf user to type messages in English. But most Deaf and many additional deaf and hard of hearing people are not proficient in English, so even if they are physically able to type they cannot communicate meaningfully with this device. ASL is a complete language entirely different from English and it has no written component. People whose first language is ASL, including many Plaintiffs, are often not proficient in written English. TTY is not accessible for people, like many Plaintiffs, who have extremely limited use of English. Moreover, TTY is ineffective even when used by an individual fluent in English. Typed TTY conversations necessarily take much more time than traditional voice calls or video calls; TTY communications do not include important linguistic information such as emotion, tone, or inflection, which can affect meaning and message significantly; TTY messages are often garbled or indecipherable; and TTY users cannot interrupt each other as typical in a natural, free-flowing conversation.

113. Moreover, the TTY machines at several GDOC prisons are not meaningfully available. On information and belief, the TTY machine at CSP has been broken for at least 10 years. The TTY machine at ASMP sometimes works, but the machine is located in a counselor's office, and inmates can only access it when that counselor happens to be in her office and agrees to allow TTY access. TTYs at GDOC facilities are generally available on a significantly more restricted basis than are traditional telephones despite the fact that conversations on TTYs are necessarily slower given the drawbacks of the technology. TTY calls also result in higher charges for prisoners' families.

114. For the most part, deaf and hard of hearing individuals in the United States have abandoned the outdated and ineffective TTY. Instead, deaf and hard of hearing people generally use videophones and captioned telephones. As of 2012, only 12% of relay calls in the United States came from TTY devices.<sup>12</sup>

115. Videophones allow deaf individuals to communicate with one another directly (and in real time) in ASL, or to communicate with hearing people using a free video-relay operator who translates English into sign language and vice versa. The deaf or hard of hearing user does not need to use any written English to communicate via videophone. Video-relay operators are paid with tax dollars, and their services are not charged to users or prisons.

116. Deaf or hard of hearing people who speak and read English – often people who lose some or all of their hearing later in life – use captioned telephones or other reliable internet-based relay services to communicate. Captioned telephones allow deaf or hard of hearing users to speak directly into the captioned telephone. A relay operator converts the other party's spoken words into written captions that appear in real time on the captioned telephone. If the deaf or hard of hearing user has some residual hearing, they can listen to the spoken message on the receiver while simultaneously reading the captioned message. Captioned-telephone operators are paid with tax dollars, and their services are not charged to users or prisons.

117. On information and belief, GDOC fails to provide any access to videophones or captioned telephones at any of its facilities across the state. Plaintiffs and other similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing incarcerated people are deprived of crucial communication access with the outside world.

118. For example, Mr. Wooden was eligible for parole in January 2018. On information and belief, parole eligibility depends, in part, on an incarcerated person providing a verified address where they will live if released. But because Mr. Wooden does not have access to videophones, he was not able to call his family to confirm the address where he could live after release, or to contact halfway houses that might accept him. On information and belief, Mr. Wooden's inability to list an address for parole contributed to GBOP's January 2018 decision denying him parole. Mr. Wooden now faces an additional 17 months in prison, not for any penological or public safety reason, but because he could not communicate with people outside the prison.

119. For example, Mr. Cobb is appealing his conviction with the help of a lawyer unaffiliated with this action. Mr. Cobb cannot use a standard telephone and does not understand English well enough to communicate effectively with written letters or by TTY. Because there are no videophones at any of the prisons where he has been incarcerated, Mr. Cobb cannot communicate at all with his attorney unless the attorney drives to the prison to meet in person. The public defender assigned to his appeal has never been able to visit Mr. Cobb in person. Mr.

Cobb has no information on the status of his appeal, whether it was filed, whether it will be argued, or whether it has been decided.

120. For example, Mr. Shields is seeking a new trial based on errors in his criminal trial, including introduction of evidence of a contested “confession” that Mr. Shields supposedly expressed to a hearing individual without an interpreter present. Because there are no videophones in GDOC prisons, Mr. Shields cannot communicate with his attorney. He can only communicate with his public defender if the public defender – who lives nearly three hours from CSP – visits Mr. Shields in person, significantly curtailing his access to his attorney. The public defender assigned to Mr. Shields’ case has never been able to visit him in person.

121. For example, Mr. Green has virtually no communication with the outside world because of GDOC’s failure to provide videophones. Mr. Green cannot read or write in English. His family lives far away and cannot afford to visit him. Mr. Green would communicate with his family if he had access to a videophone.

122. For example, Mr. Moore, like other incarcerated people, wants to communicate with friends and family by phone. Mr. Moore cannot communicate using a standard telephone. He can write and understand simple information in English. If there were a functioning TTY available, he might be able to use it for some basic communication with people outside the prison (although it would not be equal to the communication access that hearing inmates enjoy). There is a TTY at CSP, but it has never functioned in the seven years Mr. Moore has been incarcerated there. He has never sent or received a message via TTY. For Mr. Moore to effectively and equally communicate with his family, friends, and lawyers outside the prison, he needs a videophone and video relay services. CSP has never provided a videophone for Mr. Moore to contact people outside the prison.

123. For example, Mr. Henderson communicates by written notes, speech, and residual hearing. He cannot effectively communicate with a standard telephone. His preferred communication method is an amplified telephone with captioning. If GDOC provided telecommunications accessible to Mr. Henderson, he would be able to communicate reliably with his family who live more than three hours away from JSP.

124. The incarcerated Plaintiffs would use accessible telecommunications if available, but all of the incarcerated Plaintiffs are now either largely or completely unable to communicate through telecommunications with loved ones and attorneys outside the prison. Without access to their attorneys, plaintiffs cannot participate and assist their attorneys in the appeal of wrongful convictions. Furthermore, research shows that incarcerated people who maintain contact with family outside of prison have lower rates of recidivism after release. Plaintiffs are denied this contact with their attorneys and families because GDOC fails to provide telecommunications access for deaf and hard of hearing inmates.

D. Unreasonable Use Of Administrative Isolation

125. Deaf and hard of hearing inmates are particularly affected by the sensory deprivations of solitary confinement, administrative segregation, protective custody, and other forms of prolonged isolation. Isolation has devastating effects on all inmates and is considered a form of torture in many parts of the world. But for people who are deaf and hard of hearing, the devastating effects of isolation are further magnified. While hearing inmates can shout to communicate to others in isolation or to get the attention of passing guards, deaf and hard of hearing inmates generally cannot share information through speech. While hearing inmates can learn information by listening to other inmates and guards, deaf and hard of hearing inmates have no such access to information.

126. Deaf and hard of hearing people in isolation miss meals, showers, appointments, and medications because these are announced using only auditory cues.

127. On information and belief, people in isolation can communicate with medical staff and request appointments through written notes. But most Deaf inmates have extremely limited English and cannot express important information, like a physical or mental health crisis, that may occur while being held in isolation. People in isolation are generally permitted books as a form of stimulation and to mitigate the sensory and social isolations of segregation. But most incarcerated Deaf people cannot enjoy these books (when provided) because they do not understand written English.

128. For example, Mr. J. Smith was held in protective custody for eight months at ASMP. During this time, Mr. J. Smith missed information and meals. He also experienced severe effects of sensory and social isolation, including depression, anxiety, and disorientation. While other people in segregation could use the phones nearly every day, Mr. J. Smith could only use the TTY once in a while. TTY is not an effective form of communication for Mr. J. Smith, who has extremely limited English. Mr. J. Smith sometimes had to choose between taking a shower and using the TTY to communicate simple information to his mother.

129. For example, Mr. Coen was held in solitary confinement for a week. He did not know how long he would be there. He was completely cut off from all communication during that time. He experienced significant mental distress and exacerbation of depression during this period of isolation.

E. Use And Placement Of Handcuffs Without Regard To Communication

130. Many Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing people communicate primarily or exclusively with their hands, including through ASL, gesturing, and writing notes. For Plaintiffs and similarly situated people, having their hands cuffed behind their backs completely prevents any communication.

131. Defendant GDOC routinely handcuffs inmates, including Plaintiffs and similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates, behind their backs without regard to the communicative isolation this creates. Defendant GDOC makes no assessment of the specific harm or need for behind-the-back handcuffing of Plaintiffs.

132. For example, Mr. Moore was handcuffed at a disciplinary hearing. Even though the purpose of the hearing was to determine what happened, Mr. Moore was handcuffed with his hands behind his back for the duration of the hearing, leaving him with no way to communicate any information at all.

133. For example, Mr. J. Smith was handcuffed behind his back whenever he left his segregation cell in ASMP. Mr. J. Smith was in segregation for his own protection, not for punishment. On information and belief, hearing inmates in segregation can speak to one another while they are being escorted through the prison, but no communication was available to Mr. J. Smith.

134. For example, Mr. Coen was handcuffed on his way to, and during, a disciplinary hearing. The handcuffs were too tight on his wrists. He experienced bruising and cuts from the handcuffs. He had no way to communicate that the handcuffs were on too tight. He still has scars on his wrists from this experience. Once he arrived at the disciplinary hearing, he was completely unable to communicate or defend himself, through ASL, written notes, or gestures. There was no assessment at any stage of this process whether handcuffing was necessary.

F. Failure To Include Deaf And Hard of Hearing Individuals In Emergency Planning

135. GDOC facilities have emergency plans and emergency equipment to protect incarcerated people in case of emergency. But these protections are not available to Plaintiffs and other similarly situated deaf and hard of hearing inmates.

136. On information and belief, fire alarms in GDOC facilities do not all have visual components, such as flashing lights. GDOC facilities also do not provide visual or tactile notifications to inform inmates of emergencies and evacuations. On information and belief, GDOC facilities have loudspeakers to make announcements, including emergency announcements and notifications, but this information is not communicated through other means accessible to Plaintiffs and similarly situated inmates. There is no adequate visual or tactile warning or information system, such as bed-shakers, flashing alarms, or written notification of announcements in case of emergency.

G. Failure To Maintain An Accessible, Adequate Administrative Exhaustion Process

137. Defendant GDOC's written policy is "to maintain a grievance procedure available to all offenders, which provides an open and meaningful forum for their complaints, [and] the resolution of these complaints." GDOC Standard Operating Procedure IIB05-0001, § I ("Grievance Procedure"). Grievance procedures are important mechanisms for bringing concerns to the attention of a prison and seeking resolution of these complaints. Exhaustion of the administrative grievance process is generally required before an incarcerated person can file a lawsuit in federal court. For purposes of due process, access to justice, and protection of rights while incarcerated, a functioning grievance procedure is critical for all incarcerated people.

138. For people in GDOC custody, successful administrative exhaustion requires proficiency in written English and careful compliance with short deadlines and precise technical requirements. It is, at every step of the way, inaccessible to deaf and hard of hearing inmates.

139. Most deaf and hard of hearing inmates do not know anything about how the grievance process works. Information about the grievance system is conveyed verbally and in written handbooks with incarcerated people. But for most deaf and hard of hearing individuals, neither spoken nor written explanations are effective forms of communication. Most Plaintiffs had no idea how the grievance process worked before Plaintiffs' attorneys began visiting them and explaining the purpose and process of grievances using ASL interpreters and ASL-fluent attorneys.

140. Even if Plaintiffs and similarly situated inmates understand the grievance process in theory, it remains inaccessible in practice. Grievance Forms must be written in English, so anyone who is not literate in English, like many Plaintiffs, cannot access the process or file grievances. Grievance responses – if provided – are written in English, and so most Plaintiffs cannot understand them. Grievance Appeals must also be written in English.

141. Moreover, GDOC staff routinely interfere with the grievance process, creating additional barriers to successful administrative exhaustion beyond the barriers inherent in the process.

142. For example, Mr. Green had been incarcerated for 20 years before Plaintiffs' attorneys explained the grievance process to him for the first time. Until then, he had no idea that grievances were a tool that he could use to complain about problems in the prison.

143. Mr. D. Smith filed grievances with the help of another Deaf inmate who was more literate in English than he was. But after that person left the prison, Mr. D. Smith had no way to write any additional grievances because he cannot write his concerns in English. While he understood the grievance process, thanks to assistance from another inmate, he did not have actual access to it.

144. A counselor at CSP refused to accept grievances from Mr. Green because Plaintiffs' attorneys had written Mr. Green's name and ID number – correctly – at the top of the Grievance Form. Because these sections were supposed to be filled out only by prison staff, the counselor denied Mr. Green's attempt to submit his grievances. Because CSP refuses to provide interpreters for its meetings with deaf and hard of hearing inmates, the counselor could not communicate the “problem” to Mr. Green.

145. Mr. Doe requested Grievance Forms but his counselor told him, “We don't have those here.”

146. Mr. Coen attempted to file a grievance about the injuries to his wrists and torso that he experienced from handcuffs being too tight. But when Mr. Coen gave his grievance to a counselor, she crumpled it into a ball and threw it in the trash.

147. After ASMP failed to respond to Mr. Cobb's grievances in the required 40 days, ASMP attempted to give itself an untimely 10-day extension of its response deadline by sending Mr. Cobb a back-dated letter.

148. Mr. Cobb attempted to appeal the lack of a response to his grievance after more than 40 days had passed, as authorized under the Grievance Procedure. But Mr. Cobb's counselor refused to accept his appeal, telling him he had to wait for his grievance response.

149. GDOC officers also threaten retaliation against inmates who attempt to file grievances.

150. For example, in February 2018, prison officials at ASMP met with most of the deaf and hard of hearing inmates at ASMP, including several Plaintiffs. Prison staff stated at this meeting that there were too many grievances being filed, and that all deaf and hard of hearing inmates would be transferred to CSP. At 2 a.m. the next day, Messrs. Cobb, Harris, Herrera, A. Smith, and J. Smith were transferred to CSP.

151. Mr. Doe was threatened with retaliation after filing grievances. He proceeds under a pseudonym in this case based on substantial fear of retaliation by GDOC or GDCS officials for asserting his rights under federal law and the U.S. Constitution.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXHAUSTION

152. Plaintiffs have complied with GDOC's administrative remedies pursuant to Section 1997e(a) of the Prison Litigation Reform Act. Exhaustion of administrative remedies is a two-step process set forth in GDOC Standard Operating Procedure IIB05-0001 ("Grievance Procedure").

153. The first step to seek administrative remedies is writing and submitting a grievance to a counselor in the prison. An incarcerated person must write his complaint on a specific form ("Grievance Form"), and give this form to a counselor. The grievance must be submitted within 10 calendar days of the date the incarcerated person "knew, or should have known, of the facts giving rise to the grievance." Grievance Proc. § VI(D)(4). The Warden is required to respond to the grievance within 40 calendar days from the date the incarcerated person gave the Grievance Form to a counselor. Id. § VI(D)(7). The prison may take a "onetime 10 [c]alendar day extension," giving itself 50 days to respond to a grievance, as long as the incarcerated person is "advised, in writing, of the extension prior to the expiration of the original 40 calendar days." Id.

154. The second step of the exhaustion process is the filing of a Central Office Appeal. An incarcerated person may appeal a grievance response, or he may appeal the prison's failure to respond to his grievance within the time allotted. Appeals must be written on a specific appeal form ("Grievance Appeal"). Id. § VI(E)(1). The incarcerated person must give Grievance Appeals to a counselor, who "must sign and date the Central Office Appeal Form and give a copy of the completed Form to the offender as a receipt." Id. § VI(E)(5). The GDOC Commissioner or his designee must deliver a response to the Grievance Appeal to the incarcerated person within 100 calendar days after the Grievance Appeal was received by the counselor. Id. § VI(E)(7).

155. The Grievance Procedure states that "[n]o inmate may be denied access to" the grievance procedure, id. § VI(A)(2), and that "[r]etaliation against an offender for filing a grievance is strictly prohibited," id. § VI(A)(3).

156. Compliance with the grievance process is exceptionally difficult for Deaf inmates, including Plaintiffs, who typically do not understand English and therefore cannot read or fill out documents without assistance. As discussed below, GDOC has failed to provide assistance or interpreters to deaf or hard of hearing inmates to help them understand the process or file grievances, rendering the grievance procedure inaccessible and unavailable to them. Defendants also interfered with and failed to comply with the Grievance Procedure, making the already-complex procedure virtually incomprehensible.

Jerry Coen

157. Mr. Coen was incarcerated until February 2017. Mr. Coen can understand some written English, but he has extremely limited English. His native language is ASL. Mr. Coen did not have access to attorneys, ASL interpreters, or other auxiliary aids or assistance to exhaust his administrative remedies while incarcerated. Nonetheless, Mr. Coen exhausted all administrative remedies that were available to him.

158. On October 20, 2016, Mr. Coen submitted a grievance complaining about discrimination and destruction of property during a shakedown two days prior. Mr. Coen stated that CSP staff had destroyed his hearing aid and his locker box during the shakedown because they were angry and unable to communicate with Mr. Coen. On November 16, 2016, CSP rejected his grievance, stating, inexplicably, that the destruction of Mr. Coen's own hearing aid "does not effect [sic] him personally." Mr. Coen appealed CSP's rejection on November 22, 2016. The Central Office Commissioner responded on January 13, 2017, denying the grievance after finding "no evidence that you were discriminated against." Mr. Coen has exhausted his administrative remedies.

159. On November 7, 2016, Mr. Coen submitted a grievance stating that CSP was refusing to provide mental health services, even though Mr. Coen had requested evaluations on numerous occasions. On December 1, 2016, CSP denied the grievance, stating that there was "not evidence" that Mr. Coen had requested mental health services. On December 7, 2016, Mr. Coen appealed, reiterating that he had requested mental health services on multiple occasions, and reiterating that, "I really need help." Mr. Coen did not receive a response from the Central Office Commissioner to this appeal. Mr. Coen has exhausted his administrative remedies.

160. On January 3, 2017, Mr. Coen submitted a grievance stating that he was handcuffed during a disciplinary hearing and denied interpretation at this hearing. On February 9, 2017, CSP denied the grievance. On February 15, 2017, Mr. Coen appealed the denial, restating that he had been denied communication access and that prison staff were laughing at

Mr. Coen during his hearing. Mr. Coen did not receive a response from the Central Office Commissioner to this appeal. Mr. Coen has exhausted his administrative remedies.

161. Mr. Coen also attempted to exhaust numerous other issues but was unable to do so because of CSP's failure to comply with its requirements under the Grievance Procedure. On May 10, 2016, Mr. Coen requested a copy of responses to grievances, but was informed that his Grievance Appeal was "in appeal process" and that no copies were available. On September 27, 2016, Mr. Coen attempted to submit a Grievance Appeal but his counselor refused to accept the appeal. On November 7, 2016, Mr. Coen again requested a copy of the responses to his Grievance Appeal for the same issue and was told that the grievance was "still pending at the institutional level." Mr. Coen never learned the outcome of this grievance.

Brandon Cobb

162. In late 2017, Plaintiffs' attorneys began meeting with Mr. Cobb. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With effective communication with Plaintiffs' attorneys through ASL, Mr. Cobb learned for the first time how the grievance process works. Plaintiffs' attorneys and interpreters translated Mr. Cobb's concerns into English. With the help of interpreters, Mr. Cobb wrote grievances challenging the lack of communication access, interpreters, and videophones. Mr. Cobb could only write these grievances after Plaintiffs' attorneys began visiting because interpreters had never explained the grievance process to him, and because he could not fill out grievance forms in English without assistance from a qualified interpreter.

163. Mr. Cobb submitted his grievances on December 19, 2017, while incarcerated at ASMP. Under the Grievance Procedure, ASMP had 40 calendar days – until January 28, 2018 – to respond to his grievances. Under section VI(D)(7) of the Grievance Procedure, the prison may take one 10-day extension of its deadline to respond to a grievance, “however, the offender must be advised, in writing, of the extension prior to the expiration of the original 40 calendar days.” On January 31, 2018, Mr. Cobb received two letters from the prison, stating that both of his grievances had been granted 10-day extensions. Both letters were dated January 25, 2018, but Mr. Cobb did not receive them until January 31, 2018, more than 40 days after the original grievances were filed. These extensions were improperly granted and impermissibly back-dated.

164. On February 1, 2018, Mr. Cobb filed appeals with the assistance of ASL interpreters and Plaintiffs’ attorneys. He appealed the lack of a timely response to his grievance and explained why the prison’s 10-day extension was improper.

165. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. Cobb’s appeals, which were filed on February 1, 2018. The Commissioner’s response was due on May 12, 2018. Mr. Cobb did not receive a response to his appeals from the Central Office Commissioner. Mr. Cobb has exhausted his administrative remedies.

John Doe

166. Plaintiff John Doe is or has been incarcerated and is currently subject to control of either GDOC or GDCS. During Mr. Doe’s incarceration, he submitted grievances concerning the lack of interpreters and communication access to understand his incarceration.

167. Mr. Doe was denied access to the administrative exhaustion process. He requested blank Grievance Forms and was told that the facility in which he was incarcerated did not have Grievance Forms. There was no way for Mr. Doe to proceed with the administrative exhaustion process.

168. Mr. Doe was also threatened with retaliation if he pursued the administrative exhaustion process; accordingly, he proceeds under a pseudonym out of fear of retaliation.

GDOC officials told Mr. Doe that he should stop filing grievances and appeals, as these documents made the GDOC facility in which he was incarcerated “look bad.” He perceived this as a threat of retaliation if he continued to pursue administrative exhaustion. GDOC officials also told Mr. Doe that he should stop speaking to Plaintiffs’ attorneys. Mr. Doe perceived this as an additional threat of retaliation if he continued to pursue administrative or legal remedies.

169. The administrative exhaustion process is not available to Mr. Doe.

Tommy Green

170. Prior to August 2017, Mr. Green had no idea how the administrative grievance process worked. Mr. Green has been incarcerated for more than two decades at numerous GDOC prisons. None of these prisons provided interpreters at their orientations, when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. Mr. Green never had interpreters to communicate with prison counselors, so he could not ask about how the grievance process worked or receive assistance in reading or filling out Grievance Forms. Although each prison is required to provide inmates with an “Offender Handbook,” these documents are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. Green. Mr. Green has never had interpreters to explain the contents of any prison’s “Offender Handbook.”

171. Plaintiffs’ attorneys began visiting and meeting with Mr. Green in August 2017. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With this effective communication, Mr. Green was able to understand the grievance process for the first time. Mr. Green decided to file grievances about his need for videophones, and his need for interpreters to understand parole and the papers he received about parole.

172. Under the Grievance Procedure, grievances must be submitted in writing. Because Mr. Green is not proficient in English, he requires assistance to translate his concerns from ASL into written English on a Grievance Form. GDOC prisons do not provide this assistance. Mr. Green was only able to fill out grievances with the assistance of Plaintiffs' attorneys.

173. On December 13, 2017, Plaintiffs' attorneys helped Mr. Green write two grievances, one about videophone access and the other about communication needs to understand parole. Plaintiffs' attorneys spoke to Mr. Green about his needs, translated his concerns into English, wrote these concerns onto Grievance Forms, and then discussed them with Mr. Green via ASL to ensure everything was accurate and clear. Mr. Green signed both grievances. At the top of the Grievance Form, where there is a line next to "OFFENDER NAME" and a line next to "OFFENDER NUMBER," Plaintiffs' attorneys wrote Mr. Green's full name and GDOC identification number.

174. On December 13, 2017, Mr. Green attempted to give both Grievance Forms to his counselor. His counselor refused to accept the grievances. There was no interpreter to assist Mr. Green in understanding why the counselor would not accept the grievances. The counselor gestured to the top of the Grievance Forms, where Mr. Green's name and identification number were written on the lines for "OFFENDER NAME" and "OFFENDER NUMBER," respectively. The counselor turned Mr. Green away without accepting his Grievance Forms. Mr. Green had no idea what the problem was.

175. By chance, another Deaf incarcerated person happened to be nearby, and recognized that the counselor rejected the grievances because the counselor – not the inmate – is supposed to write the inmate's name and identification number on the Grievance Form. With further assistance from Plaintiffs' attorneys, Mr. Green re-submitted identical grievances, leaving the spaces for name and identification number blank, the next day. These grievances were accepted on December 14, 2017.

176. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until January 23, 2018 – to respond to Mr. Green’s grievances. On January 24, 2018, after 41 days had passed with no response from CSP, Plaintiffs’ attorneys helped Mr. Green write two appeals challenging the lack of a response to his two grievances, as authorized by the Grievance Procedure. Mr. Green gave these appeals to a counselor on January 24, 2018 and received receipts confirming acceptance and receipt of the Grievance Appeals.

177. On February 6, 2018, 52 days after Mr. Green submitted his grievances and 11 days after he submitted his appeals, Mr. Green’s counselor, Counselor Chambers, called Mr. Green into her office. An interpreter was present at this meeting. Counselor Chambers purported to respond to Mr. Green’s December grievances at this meeting (even though a counselor had already accepted and submitted Mr. Green’s Grievance Appeals to the Central Office). With respect to videophones, Counselor Chambers stated that she was denying Mr. Green’s grievance on the grounds that there was a TTY machine available.<sup>13</sup> With respect to accessible parole information, Counselor Chambers stated that VRI would be available to discuss parole in the future.<sup>14</sup> Counselor Chambers required Mr. Green to sign papers apparently related to these responses. Counselor Chambers refused to give Mr. Green copies of these papers.

<sup>13</sup> TTY is an outdated technology through which users communicate in written English across telephone lines. TTY is inaccessible for people, like Mr. Green, who cannot read or write in English. It is infrequently used by deaf and hard of hearing people today. See supra, para. 112.

<sup>14</sup> Qualified sign language interpreters may communicate either through in-person interactions (live interpretation) or through VRI. With VRI, a remote interpreter uses videoconferencing technology on a computer to interpret in real-time a conversation between a deaf and a hearing individual. For example, at a doctor’s appointment, a hearing doctor may communicate with a deaf patient using an off-site remote interpreter and VRI technology. To be effective, VRI requires a reliable, high-speed internet connection with sufficient bandwidth and dependable access. If the internet speed is too slow, the VRI image may be pixelated, jumpy, or may freeze altogether, preventing effective visual communication between the interpreter and the deaf individual. Most deaf people who use sign

178. On February 7, 2018, Mr. Green, with help from Plaintiffs' attorneys, wrote two Grievance Appeals to challenge Counselor Chambers' responses at the February 6, 2018 meeting. Mr. Green attempted to give these appeals to Counselor Chambers on February 7, 2018, but Counselor Chambers shooed Mr. Green away and refused to accept his appeals. On February 8, 2018, Mr. Green again attempted to give his Grievance Appeals to Counselor Chambers, along with a note written by an attorney requesting a copy of the documents he had signed on February 6, 2018. Counselor Chambers accepted the appeals, but still refused to provide copies of documents Mr. Green signed.

179. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. Green's appeals, which were first filed on January 24, 2018. On April 30, 2018, the Central Office Commissioner responded to both of Mr. Green's Grievance Appeals. The Central Office Commissioner denied Mr. Green's Grievance Appeal seeking videophones, stating that "you are being provided contract services to include the TTY device and access to VRI . . . and Central State Prison is reviewing the possibility of implementing video relay services." VRI is used only when a deaf person and a hearing person are in the same room: it is not a method of communicating with family or friends outside the prison. The TTY machine remains inaccessible to Mr. Green, as he does not use or understand written English. The Commissioner "partially granted" Mr. Green's request for accessible information about parole, stating that a "prison official met with you on December 14, 2017 and discussed your parole issues using the services of an interpreter." Mr. Green did have a single meeting with an language prefer to communicate via in-person interpreters rather than VRI, particularly for complex communications. Use of VRI is not appropriate in some circumstances including if the deaf or hard of hearing individual cannot see or cannot be seen by the VRI due to mobility restrictions; is heavily medicated, intoxicated, or in a lot of pain; is highly emotional or presents with violent tendencies; has cognitive disabilities and/or other secondary disability such as low vision.

interpreter in December 2017, but he did not learn anything about his parole eligibility at this meeting. Mr. Green has exhausted his administrative remedies.

Ricardo Harris

180. Prior to August 2017, Mr. Harris did not understand how the administrative grievance process worked. None of the prisons in which Mr. Harris had been incarcerated provided interpreters at their orientations when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. Mr. Harris has extremely limited written English, so he could not understand the contents of any prison's Offender Handbook, which are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. Harris.

181. On December 19, 2017, with the help of Plaintiffs' attorneys and accompanying interpreters, Mr. Harris submitted two Grievance Forms to his counselor at ASMP. One grievance explained that, four days prior, Mr. Harris had had a medical emergency, requiring a trip to the hospital, but that ASMP had not provided interpreters at any point during this emergency. Mr. Harris stated that he had been unable to effectively communicate his symptoms, and that he still did not understand his diagnosis, prognosis, or treatment. The second grievance explained that Mr. Harris missed work and other scheduled activities because ASMP refused to provide visual or tactile alarms for him and other deaf and hard of hearing inmates.

182. Under the Grievance Procedure, ASMP had 40 calendar days – until January 28, 2018 – to respond to Mr. Harris's grievances. Shortly before the 40 days had passed, Mr. Harris learned that his counselor had stated that Mr. Harris was "on thin ice"; that the counselor "d[id]n't want to hear you asking for alarms or notifications"; that writing grievances "makes you look like a troublemaker"; and that Mr. Harris "shouldn't be writing grievances in the first place."

183. Mr. Harris never received responses to his grievances. Due to the express threats of retaliation in response to his grievances, the administrative exhaustion process was unavailable to Mr. Harris.

Leroy Henderson

184. Mr. Henderson is late-deafened and does not communicate using sign language. He communicates through speech and residual hearing. He had limited education and is not literate in complex written English. Mr. Henderson also has psychiatric disabilities, and fears that prison staff and other inmates are trying to kill him.

185. None of the prisons where Mr. Henderson has been incarcerated have provided amplification devices to Mr. Henderson. Mr. Henderson has frequently gone months without access to functioning hearing aids. Without sound amplification, it is very difficult for Mr. Henderson to understand speech. His comprehension is further diminished by prisons' ubiquitous background noise. During visits with Mr. Henderson, Plaintiffs' attorneys used a simple sound amplification headset that allowed easy and clear communication with Mr. Henderson, but no such accommodations have been provided by GDOC.

186. The prisons in which Mr. Henderson has been incarcerated have failed to provide accommodations or modifications to support any of Mr. Henderson's disabilities. They have failed to provide amplification to allow meaningful communication. They have failed to provide assistance in understanding written documents. They have failed to provide therapeutic support that is accessible in light of Mr. Henderson's limited hearing. Without the amplification needed to understand what prison staff and medical personnel are saying, Mr. Henderson cannot communicate effectively or build any trust with those around him. The combination of his paranoid fears, lack of communication, lack of trust, and limited literacy make the complex, technical, all-written grievance process unavailable to Mr. Henderson.

Carlos Herrera

187. Prior to December 2017, Mr. Herrera had no idea how the administrative grievance process worked. None of the prisons in which Mr. Herrera was incarcerated provided interpreters at their orientations when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. Mr. Herrera understands almost no written English, so he could not understand the contents of any prison's Offender Handbook, as these are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. Herrera.

188. Plaintiffs' attorneys began visiting and meeting with Mr. Herrera in December 2017. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With this effective communication, Mr. Herrera was able to understand the grievance process for the first time. Mr. Herrera decided to file grievances about the need for interpreters to communicate effectively at work, and about the need for interpreters to understand documents from prison and probation.

189. On December 27, 2017, Mr. Herrera submitted these grievances to his counselor. The prison had 40 calendar days – until February 5, 2018 – to respond to Mr. Herrera's grievances. On February 6, 2018, 41 days after his grievance was submitted and having received no response from the prison, Mr. Herrera appealed the lack of a response, as authorized under the Grievance Procedure.

190. The Central Office Commissioner had 100 calendar days to respond to Mr. Herrera's Grievance Appeals. The appeal responses were due on May 17, 2018. As of May 20, 2018, Mr. Herrera had received no response from the Central Office Commissioner. Mr. Herrera was released from prison on May 21, 2018.

Tony Moore, Jr.

191. Prior to August 2017, Mr. Moore did not fully understand the grievance process. None of the prisons in which Mr. Moore has been incarcerated provided interpreters at their orientations when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. He never had interpreters to explain the contents of the prisons' Offender Handbooks, which are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. Moore.

192. Plaintiffs' attorneys began visiting and meeting with Mr. Moore in August 2017. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With this effective communication, Mr. Moore was able to fully understand the grievance process, including its purpose, process, and technical requirements, for the first time. Mr. Moore decided to file a grievance about the complete lack of communication at a recent disciplinary hearing, during which Mr. Moore was handcuffed behind his back. Plaintiffs' attorneys assisted Mr. Moore in translating his concerns from ASL into English and writing his grievance.

193. Mr. Moore attempted to file this grievance about the lack of communication access, including unnecessary handcuffing and lack of interpreters, on December 16, 2017. He gave the Grievance Form to his counselor, as provided for in the Grievance Procedure. Mr. Moore's counselor, Counselor Chambers, refused to accept the grievance, and asked Mr. Moore why he was filling out grievances. On December 18, 2017, another counselor accepted and signed Mr. Moore's grievance.

194. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until January 27, 2018 – to respond to Mr. Moore's grievance. On January 31, 2018, 44 days after his grievance was accepted and having received no response from the prison, Mr. Moore appealed the lack of response, as authorized under the Grievance Procedure. On February 6, 2018, 50 days after his grievance was accepted, Mr. Moore's counselor handed him an untimely response to his grievance. The counselor demanded that Mr. Moore sign the form, but she refused to provide Mr. Moore with a copy of the form. There was no ASL interpreter present to explain what the form said. Because Mr. Moore has limited understanding of English, he does not know what the prison's grievance response said.

195. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. Moore's appeal, which was filed on January 31, 2018. The Commissioner's response was due on May 11, 2018. Mr. Moore did not receive a response from the Central Office Commissioner. Mr. Moore has exhausted his administrative remedies.

Christopher Shields

196. During his incarceration, Mr. Shields attempted to use the grievance system based on his limited, self-taught understanding of the process. Because Mr. Shields can read some English, he was able to understand the procedure to some extent on his own. No prison officials ever explained the grievance process to Mr. Shields in an accessible way.

197. On November 27, 2017, Mr. Shields filed a Grievance Form complaining that the prison was providing faulty batteries for his hearing aids, and that these batteries were not reliable and made it more difficult for him to hear.

198. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until January 6, 2018 – to respond to Mr. Shields' grievance. Mr. Shields received no response from the prison within 40 days. On January 7, 2018, 41 days after his grievance was accepted and having received no response from the prison, Mr. Shields requested a Grievance Appeal from his counselor to appeal the lack of a timely response, as authorized by the Grievance Procedure. Mr. Shields' counselor, Counselor Chambers, refused to provide a Grievance Appeal to Mr. Shields. Counselor Chambers stated, in direct contradiction to the Grievance Procedure, that Mr. Shields could not submit a Grievance Appeal until he received a response to his Grievance Form.

199. On January 10, 2018, 44 days after he submitted his grievance, Mr. Shields received an untimely response to his grievance and was finally given a copy of a Grievance Appeal. On January 11, 2018, Mr. Shields submitted an appeal. His counselor refused to provide Mr. Shields with a copy of the appeal, in direct contradiction to the Grievance Procedure. On April 5, 2018, Mr. Shields received an appeal response purporting to grant Mr. Shields' Grievance Appeal, stating that "appropriate action will be taken." As of June 18, 2018, Mr. Shields still had not received the correct hearing aid batteries and CSP had taken no action to resolve this issue, despite promises by the Central Office Commissioner. Mr. Shields has exhausted his administrative remedies.

200. On February 1, 2018, Mr. Shields submitted a Grievance Form requesting access to visual and tactile notifications and alarms. On February 13, 2018, Mr. Shields had a meeting with Counselor Chambers. There was an interpreter present. Counselor Chambers stated that she would have a meeting informing prison staff to hold up notification signs announcing meals, sick call, pill call, count, and the beginning of each time block (when work shifts and other daily activities begin). Counselor Chambers also stated that she would try to get a vibrating watch for Mr. Shields. Counselor Chambers then asked Mr. Shields to sign a form stating that the grievance was "satisfied". Mr. Shields signed the form. Counselor Chambers refused to provide Mr. Shields with a copy of the form he signed. Mr. Shields did not understand why he did not receive a copy after signing the form, or why he did not receive a response from the prison

Warden. Counselor Chambers interfered with the grievance process by pressuring Mr. Shields to sign a form that he did not understand, a form that apparently stated that the grievance was “satisfied” when it plainly was not. As of June 18, 2018, Mr. Shields still did not have a vibrating alarm, watch, or reliable visual or tactile notifications. The remainder of the administrative exhaustion procedure was unavailable to Mr. Shields.

Andrew Smith

201. On December 21, 2017, Mr. A. Smith submitted a grievance explaining that the prison was not adequately accommodating his physical disability, including by forcing him to use stairs rather than the elevator, causing pain where his amputated leg meets his prosthetic. The prison had 40 calendar days – until January 30, 2018 – to respond to this grievance.

202. On February 4, 2018, 45 days after he submitted the grievance and having received no response from the prison, Mr. A. Smith attempted to appeal the lack of a timely response, as authorized by the Grievance Procedure. Mr. A. Smith’s counselor at ASMP refused to accept his Grievance Appeal, stating – in direct contradiction to the Grievance Procedure – that Mr. A. Smith had to wait until he received a response to his grievance the Warden before he could submit an appeal.

203. On February 5, 2018, 46 days after he submitted the grievance and still having received no response from the prison, Mr. A. Smith again attempted to appeal the lack of a timely response. This time, his Grievance Appeal was accepted.

204. In late February 2018, Mr. A. Smith received an untimely response to his grievance, and, on March 7, 2018, Mr. A. Smith submitted a second appeal to the prison’s response, clarifying that he is not permitted to use the elevator at CSP, where he had recently been transferred.

205. In early April 2018, Mr. A. Smith was called to a meeting to “investigate” his appeal. There was an interpreter present. Prison officials informed Mr. A. Smith that if he wanted to stay at CSP, he would have to “drop” his grievance. If he did not drop his grievance, he was informed that he would be sent back to ASMP. Because Mr. A. Smith knew that there are never interpreters at ASMP, while there are occasionally interpreters at CSP, he opted to sign the paper “dropping” his Grievance Appeal to avoid a retaliatory transfer that would cut off all communication access.

206. Mr. A. Smith requested a copy of the form he signed, but prison staff refused to provide him with a copy of this form. Mr. A. Smith exhausted his administrative remedies by submitting an appeal. Moreover, the prison’s “investigation interview” threatening retaliation against Mr. A. Smith rendered any additional exhaustion of administrative remedies unavailable.

Darrell Smith, Jr.

207. Prior to August 2017, Mr. D. Smith did not fully understand the grievance process. None of the prisons in which Mr. D. Smith has been incarcerated provided interpreters at their orientations when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. He never had interpreters to explain the contents of the prisons’ Offender Handbooks, which are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. D. Smith.

208. In September 2016, Mr. D. Smith, with the help of another Deaf inmate who has some English literacy, submitted a grievance explaining that he needed interpreters at classes to understand the material. On October 12, 2016, the prison responded to Mr. D. Smith’s grievance. Mr. D. Smith promptly submitted a Grievance Appeal, again with the assistance of another inmate. The Central Office Commissioner responded on December 30, 2016. Although CSP was still refusing to provide interpreters in classes, the Commissioner stated that “[n]o further action” was required because CSP “has made an effort to hire an instructor to address this issue.” Mr. D. Smith has exhausted his administrative remedies.

209. Plaintiffs’ attorneys began visiting and meeting with Mr. D. Smith starting in August 2017. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With this effective communication, Mr. D. Smith was able to fully understand the grievance process for the first time, including its purpose, process, and technical requirements. Mr. D. Smith decided to file another grievance about the ongoing need for interpreters at classes, and to file a grievance about his need for interpreters at work. Plaintiffs’ attorneys translated Mr. D. Smith’s concerns from ASL into English onto the Grievance Form.

210. On December 14, 2017, Mr. D. Smith submitted his grievance to a counselor. In early January 2018, Mr. Smith’s counselor, Counselor Chambers, called Mr. D. Smith and another Deaf incarcerated person into a meeting. There was an interpreter present. Counselor Chambers asked questions about Mr. D. Smith’s communication problems at work. Rather than providing interpreters to provide equal access to his job, Counselor Chambers instead transferred Mr. D. Smith from serving food in the kitchen to washing dishes, because there was less communication required. Mr. D. Smith preferred the job serving food on the line. Even after his transfer, there were still no interpreters provided for any part of Mr. D. Smith’s job.

211. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until January 23, 2018 – to respond to Mr. D. Smith’s grievance. On January 24, 2018, 41 days after his grievance was submitted and having received no response from the prison, Mr. D. Smith appealed the lack of a response, as authorized under the Grievance Procedure.

212. The same day, January 24, 2018, Counselor Chambers also stated that the prison had taken an extra 10 days to respond to Mr. D. Smith’s grievance. Under section VI(D)(7) of the Grievance Procedure, such an extension is permissible only if the incarcerated person is “advised, in writing, of the extension prior to the expiration of the original 40 calendar days.” Mr. D. Smith was not advised of the extension until the original 40 days had expired, and thus the extension was impermissible. Two prison officials, Counselors Chambers and Thorpe, demanded that Mr. D. Smith sign a form about the 10-day extension. Mr. D. Smith requested a copy of this document, but both counselors refused to provide him with a copy. There was no interpreter present.

213. On February 6, 2018, 54 days after Mr. D. Smith submitted his grievances, the prison provided untimely responses to both grievances, even though Counselor Chambers had already accepted his appeals. Moreover, these responses would have been untimely even if the prison’s 10-day extension had been properly taken.

214. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. D. Smith’s appeal, which was filed on January 24, 2018. On April 30, 2018, Mr. D. Smith received responses from the Central Office Commissioner to both of his Grievance Appeals. With respect to interpreters at classes, the Central Office Commissioner conceded that interpreters were not available for all of Mr. D. Smith’s scheduled classes, but that “[a]ttempts are being made to assist you every day of the week,” and therefore “[n]o further action is required.” With respect to communication at work, the Central Office Commissioner stated that “[n]o further action is required,” describing the meeting at which Counselor Chambers demoted Mr. D. Smith from the serving line to scrubbing pots as “a meeting with a Food Service worker, a counselor, and an interpreter, to advise you of the expectations related to your work detail.” Mr. D. Smith has exhausted his administrative remedies.

Jorae Smith

215. Prior to January 2018, Mr. J. Smith did not understand the grievance process. None of the prisons in which Mr. J. Smith has been incarcerated provided interpreters at their orientations when the grievance process may have been explained verbally. He has never had interpreters to explain the contents of the prisons' Offender Handbooks, which are written in English and are not accessible to Mr. J. Smith.

216. For eight months, from June 2017 until February 2018, Mr. J. Smith was held in solitary confinement as "protective custody." During this time, he was completely isolated from other inmates, meaning that he could not get any information from more literate deaf incarcerated people or others in the general population who might provide some assistance to deaf and hard of hearing people. As a Deaf person, the extreme isolation of solitary was magnified for Mr. J. Smith, who had virtually no sensory stimulation during this time.

217. In January 2018, Plaintiffs' attorneys began visiting and meeting with Mr. J. Smith. All attorneys were either fluent in ASL or accompanied by qualified ASL interpreters. With this effective communication, Mr. J. Smith was able to understand the grievance process. Mr. J. Smith decided to file grievances about the disproportionate isolation and harm of solitary confinement for deaf and hard of hearing people, and about the unequal communication access with the outside world he faced as a Deaf person held in isolation.

218. Because Mr. J. Smith cannot write in English, he required assistance from Plaintiffs' attorneys to translate his concerns from ASL into English to submit his grievances. While in protective custody, ASMP refused to allow Plaintiffs' attorneys to have "contact visits" with Mr. J. Smith; ASMP required that a plexiglass wall separate attorneys from Mr. J. Smith at all times. During these no-contact visits, it was impossible for attorneys to share paperwork or documents with Mr. J. Smith. Attorneys had to translate Mr. J. Smith's concerns onto grievances and then mail these documents to Mr. J. Smith so he could submit them to his counselor at ASMP.

219. On January 24, 2018, Mr. J. Smith submitted two Grievance Forms. The prison had 40 calendar days – until March 5, 2018 – to respond to his grievances. On March 8, 2018, 43 days after he submitted his grievances and having received no response, Mr. J. Smith appealed the lack of a response to his grievances.

220. On March 13, 2018, 48 days after Mr. J. Smith submitted his grievances and, five days after the prison had accepted appeals, Mr. J. Smith received untimely responses to both grievances. The responses erroneously stated that Mr. J. Smith had “equal access to telephone services as hearing offenders,” and that he had been “transferred to another facility that can accommodate your ADA needs.”

221. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. J. Smith's appeals, which were first filed on March 8, 2018. The Commissioner's response was due June 16, 2018. Mr. J. Smith did not receive responses to his appeals. Mr. J. Smith has exhausted his administrative remedies.

Jonah Wooden

222. On November 20, 2017, Mr. Wooden submitted a Grievance Form explaining that he needed interpreters to communicate with prison staff, and highlighting the disciplinary action taken against him due entirely to lack of effective communication with guards. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until December 30, 2017 – to respond to his grievance. The prison did not respond to his grievance until January 10, 2018, 51 days after he submitted his grievance.

223. On January 16, 2018, six days after he received the Warden's response, Mr. Wooden submitted a Grievance Appeal to his counselor. He requested a copy of the appeal, but his counselor refused to provide a copy.

224. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. Wooden's appeal. The Commissioner's response was due on April 26, 2018. The Central Office Commissioner did not respond to Mr. Wooden's appeal. Mr. Wooden has exhausted his administrative remedies.

225. On January 24, 2018, Mr. Wooden submitted a Grievance Form explaining the need for a videophone and other communication access to ensure equal access to the GBOP parole process. He explained that he had been unable to communicate with his family, and that this isolation prevented him from confirming that he could live with them if released on parole, and that this lack of an address caused GBOP to deny him parole in January 2018. Under the Grievance Procedure, CSP had 40 calendar days – until March 5, 2018 – to respond to his grievance. On March 6, 2018, 41 days after his grievance was submitted and having received no response from the prison, Mr. Wooden appealed the lack of a response to his grievance, as authorized under the Grievance Procedure.

226. Under the Grievance Procedure, the Central Office Commissioner had 100 days to respond to Mr. Wooden's appeal. The Commissioner's response was due on June 14, 2018. Mr. Wooden did not receive a response to his appeal. Mr. Wooden has exhausted his administrative remedies.

CLASS ALLEGATIONS

227. Plaintiffs bring this action on behalf of themselves and on behalf of a class of all those similarly situated pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

228. Plaintiffs seek to represent a class of all present and future deaf or hard of hearing inmates in Georgia Department of Corrections (“GDOC”) custody, subject to Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles (“GBOP”) authority, and under Georgia Department of Community Supervision (“GDCS”) supervision.

229. Plaintiffs reserve the right to amend or modify the class descriptions with greater specificity or division into subclasses or limitation to particular issues based on the results of discovery and to accommodate any of the Court’s manageability concerns.

230. The class meets the prerequisites of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a):

a. Numerosity (Rule 23(a)(1)). The class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical. As of June 2018, GDOC’s records indicate the number of people who have significant hearing loss in GDOC custody is at least 130 inmates.<sup>15</sup> As of June 2018, the exact number of class members under GDCS supervision is not known but it is determinable by objective criteria using GDCS’s records and is estimated to include more than 500 people.

b. Commonality (Rule 23(a)(2)). Common questions of law and fact predominate and are applicable to the entire class, including:

1. Whether Defendants deny deaf and hard of hearing people in custody and on supervision equally effective communication;
2. Whether Defendants deny deaf and hard of hearing people in GDOC custody effective communication in healthcare and minimally adequate healthcare;

3. Whether Defendants deny deaf and hard of hearing people in GDOC custody effective telecommunication, including videophones, captioned telephones, and amplified telephones;
4. Whether Defendants subject deaf and hard of hearing people in GDOC custody to unreasonable use of solitary confinement;
5. Whether Defendants unnecessarily use and place handcuffs on deaf and hard of hearing people in GDOC custody;
6. Whether Defendants fail to include deaf and hard of hearing people in emergency planning and fail to make emergency communications accessible;
7. Whether Defendants fail to maintain an accessible, adequate, and non-retaliatory administrative exhaustion process; and
8. Whether Defendants have failed to establish policies, training, and procedures to ensure compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”) and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act (“Section 504”) for deaf and hard of hearing inmates and for individuals who remain under supervision.

c. Typicality (Rule 23(a)(3)). Plaintiffs’ claims are typical of the claims of members of the proposed class, as their claims arise from the same policies, practices, and courses of conduct, and their claims are based on the same theory of law as the class claims.

d. Adequacy (Rule 23(a)(4)). Plaintiffs will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the proposed class. Plaintiffs’ interests do not conflict with the interests of the class members and Plaintiffs have retained counsel experienced in complex class action and constitutional litigation to prosecute this case on behalf of the class. There are no material conflicts between the claims of the representative Plaintiffs and the members of the class that would make class certification inappropriate. Counsel for the class will vigorously assert the claims of all class members.

231. Final Injunctive Relief (Rule 23(b)(2)). In addition to satisfying the prerequisites of Rule 23(a), Plaintiffs satisfy the requirements for maintaining a class action under Rule 23(b)(2). Defendants have acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the proposed class, making final injunctive relief appropriate with respect to the proposed class as a whole.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

COUNT I

Discrimination On The Basis Of Disability In Violation Of Title II Of The ADA (42 U.S.C. § 12131, et seq.)

*By All Plaintiffs, On Behalf Of Themselves And
All Others Similarly Situated, Against All Defendants*

232. Plaintiffs allege and incorporate by reference each and every allegation above as if fully set forth herein.

233. On July 12, 1990, Congress enacted the ADA “to provide a clear and comprehensive national mandate for the elimination of discrimination against individuals with disabilities.” 42 U.S.C. §12101(b)(1). Title II of the ADA states that “no qualified individual with a disability shall, by reason of such disability, be excluded from participation in or be denied the benefits of services, programs, or activities of a public entity, or be subjected to discrimination by any such entity.” 42 U.S.C. § 12132.

234. Plaintiffs are “qualified individual[s] with a disability” within the meaning of the ADA.

235. Public entities are required under the ADA to “take appropriate steps to ensure that communication with . . . participants . . . with disabilities are as effective as communication with others.” 28 C.F.R. § 35.160(a)(1). Ensuring effective communication includes “furnish[ing] appropriate auxiliary aids and services,” 28 C.F.R. § 25. 160(b)(1), including “[q]ualified interpreters . . . real-time computer-aided transcription services . . . telephone headset amplifiers; assistive listening devices . . . telephones compatible with hearing aids; open and closed captioning, including real-time captioning; voice, text, and video-based telecommunications products and systems, including text telephones (TTYs), videophones, and captioned telephones[.]” 28 C.F.R. § 35.104.

The type of auxiliary aid or service necessary to ensure effective communication will vary in accordance with the method of communication used by the individual; the nature, length, and complexity of the communication involved; and the context in which the communication is taking place. In determining what types of auxiliary aids and services are necessary, a public entity shall give primary consideration to the requests of the individuals with disabilities. In order to be effective, auxiliary aids and services must be provided in accessible formats, in a timely manner, and in such a way as to protect the privacy and independence of the individual with a disability.

28 C.F.R. § 35.160(b)(2).

236. In providing any aid, benefit or service, a public entity “may not . . . [d]eny a qualified individual with a disability the opportunity to participate in or benefit from the aid, benefit or service,” “[a]fford a qualified individual with a disability an opportunity to participate in an aid, benefit, or service that is not equal to that afforded others,” “[p]rovide a qualified individual with a disability with an aid, benefit, or service that is not as effective in affording equal opportunity . . . as that provided to others,” or “[o]therwise limit a qualified individual with a disability in the enjoyment of any right, privilege, advantage, or opportunity enjoyed by others.” 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(1)(i), (ii), (iii), (vi). A public entity must “make reasonable modifications in policies, practices, or procedures when the modifications are necessary to avoid discrimination on the basis of disability, unless the public entity can demonstrate that making the modifications would fundamentally alter the natures of the service, program, or activity.” 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(7).

237. Defendants have violated the ADA and its regulations by, inter alia: (a) failing to provide equally effective communication to Plaintiffs, including communication within prison, telecommunication during incarceration, and communication during supervision; and (b) failing to make reasonable modifications to policies, practices and procedures to avoid disability discrimination in handcuffing, administrative and punitive isolation, administrative grievance processes, and emergency planning. Defendants have also failed to establish and provide personnel training, course materials, and other mechanisms to ensure that such policies as they have established or may establish in the future to comply with the ADA with regard to deaf or hard of hearing inmates or people under GDCS supervision have been and will be propagated effectively to wardens, guards, GDCS officers and GBOP officers, and other personnel to produce necessary understanding and compliance.

238. Defendants’ unlawful actions were and continue to be intentional, willful, malicious, and/or done with reckless disregard to the right of Plaintiffs and other people similarly situated to be free from discrimination based on disability.

239. Plaintiffs and those similarly situated are entitled to declaratory relief, injunctive relief, attorneys’ fees and costs, and such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

240. Plaintiff Coen, on behalf of himself individually, seeks compensatory damages against GDOC.

241. In the event that a class is certified, each class representative seeks a reasonable service award.

COUNT II

Discrimination On The Basis Of Disability In Violation Of Section 504 Of The Rehabilitation Act (29 U.S.C. § 794 et seq.)

*By All Plaintiffs, On Behalf Of Themselves And
All Others Similarly Situated, Against All Defendants*

242. Plaintiffs allege and incorporate by reference each and every allegation above as if fully set forth herein.

243. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act states that no qualified individual with a disability in the United States . . . shall, solely by reason of [ ] disability, be excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

29 U.S.C. § 794(a).

244. Plaintiffs are qualified “individual[s] with a disability” within the meaning of the Rehabilitation Act, 29 U.S.C. § 705(20).

245. Defendants receive “Federal financial assistance” within the meaning of 29 U.S.C. § 794(a).

246. The operations of GDOC, GDCS, and GBOP are “program[s] or activit[ies]” within the meaning of 29 U.S.C. § 794(b)(1)(A)–(B) and/or (b)(2)(B).

247. The Rehabilitation Act requires that recipients of federal financial assistance, including Defendants, shall provide appropriate auxiliary aids to qualified handicapped persons with impaired sensory, manual, or speaking skills where a refusal to make such provision would discriminatorily impair or exclude the participation of such persons in a program or activity receiving federal financial assistance.

28 C.F.R. § 42.503(f).

248. Appropriate auxiliary aids include, but are not limited to, “qualified interpreters . . . and telephonic devices.” 28 C.F.R. § 42.503(f).

249. As detailed herein, Defendants have violated Section 504 and its regulations by, inter alia: (a) failing to provide equally effective communication to Plaintiffs, including communication within prison, telecommunication during incarceration, and communication during supervision; and (b) failing to make reasonable modifications to policies, practices and procedures to avoid disability discrimination in handcuffing, administrative and punitive isolation, administrative grievance processes, and emergency planning. Defendants have also failed to establish and provide personnel training, course materials, and other mechanisms to ensure that such policies as they have established or may establish in the future to comply with Section 504 with regard to deaf or hard of hearing individuals in GDOC custody or subject to GDSCS supervision have been and will be propagated effectively to wardens, guards, GDSCS officers, and other personnel to produce necessary understanding and compliance.

250. Defendants’ unlawful actions were and continue to be intentional, willful, malicious, and/or done with reckless disregard to the rights of Plaintiffs and others similarly situated to have effective communication and be free from discrimination based on disability.

251. Plaintiffs and those similarly situated are entitled to declaratory relief, injunctive relief, attorneys’ fees and costs, and such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

252. Plaintiff Coen, on behalf of himself individually, seeks compensatory damages against GDOC.

253. In the event that a class is certified, each class representative seeks a reasonable service award.

COUNT III

Cruel And Unusual Punishment In Violation Of The Eighth And Fourteenth Amendments (42 U.S.C. § 1983)

*By All Plaintiffs, On Behalf Of Themselves And
All Others Similarly Situated, Against Defendants Dozier, Ward, Nix, Myrick, Sauls, Perry, Philbin, And Caldwell*

254. Plaintiffs allege and incorporate by reference each and every allegation above as if fully set forth herein.

255. Under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, “[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.” U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

256. Defendants have, in their official capacities, deprived and continue to deprive Plaintiffs of their right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment as secured by the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment.

257. Defendants have systematically denied Plaintiffs access to minimally adequate health care during their incarceration. Defendants have failed to provide interpreters and other auxiliary aids and services necessary for Plaintiffs to communicate with medical staff. Defendants refuse to provide Plaintiffs with hearing-related health care, including hearing aids, hearing aid batteries, other hearing devices, and appointments with hearing specialists.

Defendants have also systematically denied Plaintiffs access to vital health and safety information and announcements, such as emergency alarms. Defendants also subject Plaintiffs to extended periods of solitary confinement, with virtually no stimulation or communication of any kind, constituting cruel and unusual punishment.

258. Defendants have actual knowledge of the unconstitutionally dangerous conditions to which Plaintiffs were, and continue to be, subjected. Plaintiffs have submitted numerous written complaints to GDOC staff requesting that sign language interpreters and other auxiliary aids and services be provided for medical appointments, that minimally adequate hearing-related care be provided, that important health and safety announcements be provided to them.

259. Defendants' actions and inactions place Plaintiffs at a substantial risk of serious future harm.

260. Despite actual knowledge of the substantial medical and safety risks Plaintiffs face while in their custody, Defendants continue to disregard Plaintiffs' medical, health, and safety needs in violation of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

261. Defendants' failure to comply with the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution has resulted in harm to Plaintiffs, and will continue to result in harm to Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs will remain in the custody of GDOC and continue to receive inadequate medical care and treatment and access to health and safety information, unless and until Defendants are ordered by this Court to make modifications to their policies, practices, and procedures pursuant to Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

262. Plaintiffs and those similarly situated are entitled to declaratory relief, injunctive relief, attorneys' fees and costs, and such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

263. In the event that a class is certified, each class representative seeks a reasonable service award.

COUNT IV

Violation Of The Due Process Clause Of The Fourteenth Amendment
(42 U.S.C. § 1983)

*By All Plaintiffs, On Behalf Of Themselves And
All Others Similarly Situated,
Against All Individual Defendants*

264. Plaintiffs allege and incorporate by reference each and every allegation above as if fully set forth herein.

265. Under the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, “[n]o state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.” U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

266. Defendants have, in their official capacities, deprived and continue to deprive Plaintiffs of their due process rights as secured by the Fourteenth Amendment by failing to provide minimal due process before imposing severe punishments such as prolonged isolation. Plaintiffs are not meaningfully present at Disciplinary Review (“DR”) hearings, as they are entirely unable to communicate, and entirely unable to understand the proceedings against them.

267. Defendants have failed to provide meaningful access to the administrative grievance process for Plaintiffs and others similarly situated, jeopardizing Plaintiffs’ access to resolution of their concerns and blocking their access to federal courts.

268. Defendants deprive individuals of their due process rights by failing to provide adequate notice and meaningful ability to be heard before imposing harsh punishments, including re-incarceration, probation or parole revocation, or extended supervision terms.

269. Defendants' failure to comply with their duties under the Fourteenth Amendment has resulted in harm to Plaintiffs, and will continue to result in harm to Plaintiffs, as Plaintiffs will remain in the custody of GDOC, be returned to GDOC custody sooner, and continue to be denied the ability to issue complaints to rectify their unlawful treatment.

270. Plaintiffs and those similarly situated are entitled to declaratory relief, injunctive relief, attorneys' fees and costs, and such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

271. In the event that a class is certified, each class representative seeks a reasonable service award.

CONDITIONS PRECEDENT

272. All conditions precedent have been performed, have occurred, or have been waived.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

1. For an order certifying the class sought above;
2. For an order enjoining Defendants from engaging in the unlawful discrimination complained of herein;
3. For an order granting such other injunctive relief as may be appropriate;
4. For declaratory relief;
5. For reasonable attorneys' fees and costs of suit, including expert fees;
6. For reasonable service awards for the named Plaintiffs;

7. For compensatory damages for Plaintiff Coen, as stated; and
8. For such other and further relief as the court deems just and proper.

Respectfully submitted this 20th day of June, 2018,
