Introduction

“Ensuring that students enjoy such privacy is not only constitutionally mandated, it is critical to the proper development of young minds . . . That [school officials] are educating the young for citizenship is reason for scrupulous protection of Constitutional freedoms of the individual, if we are not to strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes.” Desroches v. Caprio, 156 F.3d 571, 576 n.2 (4th Cir. 1998)(quoting New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325 (1985)).

1. Plaintiffs bring this action for damages and appropriate injunctive relief to address the unconstitutional conduct and actions of the defendants during a raid conducted on November 5, 2003, at Stratford High School, as part of a criminal law enforcement operation during which plaintiffs were seized, restrained at gunpoint, and searched without cause or consent. The actions of the defendants violated the rights of plaintiffs under the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures and to be free from the use of excessive force.

2. The defendant school and law enforcement officials, acting in concert and conspiracy with each other, engaged in clearly established unconstitutional conduct. In the early morning of November 5, 2003, police officers acting at the direction of the defendants concealed themselves in utility closets, offices and the stairwell of Stratford High School’s main hallway. As the hallway filled with the plaintiffs and other students following their usual school routines, the officers rushed out with guns drawn, yelling “Get down” to more than one hundred terror-stricken students. Some students dove to the ground, while others backed away from the gun-wielding officers. The officers grabbed and pushed students who hesitated to follow their commands, and forced them to the ground. Officers put plastic restraining bands around the wrists of students who failed to immediately put their hands behind their heads. The police and school officials then led a police dog close by the students as they lay at gunpoint on the ground. The police and school officials searched the pockets, wallets, bags and other possessions of several of the students. No drugs or weapons were found.

3. By deploying uniformed police officers with their firearms drawn in the school, by allowing these officers to threaten plaintiffs with a large and aggressive police dog, and by searching the persons and property of the plaintiffs and other students, the defendants terrorized the students and betrayed the promise of a safe, secure learning environment.

4. The defendants' actions left the plaintiffs feeling betrayed, frightened, humiliated, and wrongfully accused. The plaintiffs have good reason to fear that they will be subjected to similar unconstitutional practices in the future and, therefore, are entitled to injunctive and declaratory relief.

III.

FACTS RELATING TO THE DEFENDANTS' UNCONSTITUTIONAL RAID

35. In October and November, 2003, defendant McCrackin communicated with defendants Becker and Aarons concerning suspected, but unproven, drug activity at Stratford High School.

36. During the course of these conversations, defendants McCrackin, Becker and Aarons agreed to jointly conduct a paramilitary style police raid at the School, utilizing personnel of the Police Department and the School. The plan called for searches of the persons and possessions of certain students, even though the defendants had no particularized suspicion as to any students. The plan also included the brandishing of firearms, the use of a police dog, and the use of restraining devices by police officers.

37. On November 5, 2003, defendants McCrackin, Becker, Aarons and other police officers and school employees assembled at the school. Police officers and school employees concealed themselves in closets, offices and stairwells. Upon a signal by defendant McCrackin, the officers and school employees rushed into the hallway, commanding in an intimidating manner that all students drop to the floor. The officers brandished loaded weapons, restrained certain plaintiffs' hands behind their backs in plastic restraining devices, and then searched the plaintiffs and their belongings for law enforcement purposes.

38. None of the plaintiffs were told why the police were at the school, and many thought that they were in the midst of a terrorist attack or that an intruder with a gun might be on school property. The police filled the hallway and gave verbal commands to the plaintiffs and others to "get down" and "put your hands on your head." Some plaintiffs were physically forced down onto the ground, though they had demonstrated no resistance to the police officers' orders.

39. Once the plaintiffs in the hallway were forced to the ground, officers entered the school cafeteria. At defendant McCrackin's direction, an officer placed five of the plaintiffs in plastic handcuffs and forcibly moved them into the main hallway.

40. Defendant McCrackin and police officers searched the persons and personal property of the five plaintiffs from the cafeteria, as well as the persons and property of several other students. All other plaintiffs were forced to remain on the ground. Police officers kicked the personal belongings of all students in the hall to the middle of the floor and subjected these belongings to examination by a police dog. As the dog sniffed the belongings, it picked some of them up with its teeth, shook them violently, and threw them around as if they were toys; in the process, a book bag was destroyed. The dog also passed in close proximity to many of the plaintiffs, causing them to fear that the dog would attack.

41. After the plaintiffs were searched, and no drugs were founds, their names were recorded and they were permitted to leave. Neither school officials nor police officers explained to plaintiffs why officers had rushed them, forced them to the ground, held them at gun point, and searched them and their personal property during the raid.

42. Not one of the plaintiffs has ever been found with illegal drugs or weapons in their possession at school. The defendants had no reason to believe that any plaintiff was armed or possessed drugs, and none of the plaintiffs was approached prior to the raid and given the opportunity to explain any suspected involvement with illegal drugs.

43. In the days following the raid, defendant McCrackin publicly stated his intention to carry out further raids in the same manner. Audiovisual recordings of the raid recorded a Goose Creek police officer stating as the raid ended, “Every time we think there’s dope in this school, we’re going to be coming up here to deal with it, and this is one of the ways we can deal with it.”

44. In using weapons to seize the plaintiffs without probable cause or reasonable suspicion of criminal conduct, in using restraints to bind plaintiffs’ hands behind their backs, and in deploying an aggressive police dog, defendants executed an unreasonable search and seizure and used plainly excessive and unreasonable force. By these same acts, defendants assaulted, battered, and falsely imprisoned plaintiffs and directly and proximately caused their damages thereby.

45. The defendant School District delegated final decision-making authority to defendant McCrackin with respect to law enforcement actions at Stratford High School. Pursuant to this authority, defendant McCrackin planned, ordered, orchestrated, and executed the search and seizure of plaintiffs without reasonable suspicion and thereby caused the violation of plaintiffs’ Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights.

46. The defendant School District failed to train and supervise McCrackin and other Stratford employees as to the limitations on their power to conduct searches of students, as to what constitutes reasonable suspicion and probable cause, and as to the constitutional and state law limits on school drug searches. The failure to properly train was done with deliberate indifference to plaintiffs' Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments rights and was the direct and proximate cause of the constitutional deprivations.

47. The defendant School District ratified the unconstitutional conduct when it failed to take remedial action concerning the violation of plaintiffs' Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights and by virtue of its policy of permitting such searches to take place in the future.

48. The November 5, 2003 raid was effectuated as part of a policy of the School District to employ these law enforcement methods in investigating violations of School District drug policies.

49. Defendants Becker and Aarons exercised final decision-making authority for law enforcement by the Goose Creek Police Department with respect to the Stratford raid.

50. The Goose Creek Police Department failed to train and supervise its officers with respect to (a) the constitutional limits of officers' search and seizure powers, (b) what constitutes reasonable suspicion and probable cause, (c) conduct of school drug searches, (d) the appropriate use of service revolvers during school drug searches, (e) the appropriate use of plastic hand restraints during school drug searches, (f) the appropriate use of physical force during school drug searches, and (g) the use of a police dog during school drug searches. This failure to train and supervise amounted to deliberate indifference to Plaintiffs' Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights and was the direct and proximate cause of the constitutional deprivations.

51. Defendants Goose Creek and the Goose Creek Police Department ratified the conduct of November 5, 2003, when they failed to take remedial action concerning the raid and when they announced that such raids would be conducted again as a matter of law enforcement policy.

52. All plaintiffs suffered severe and in some instances permanent emotional pain and suffering, deprivation of constitutional rights, and fear, humiliation and trauma, as a result of defendants' actions and conduct.

53. Each defendant acted with reckless or callous indifference to the plaintiffs' constitutional rights.
