We, the undersigned organizations, believe it is time to reform the immigration enforcement system in a way that is consistent with our American values and human and civil rights standards.

As advocates who have observed or participated in the debates of the last two attempts at immigration reform, we are ready to propose a new paradigm for the next round of legislation. To this end, our organizations have formed a Reform Enforcement Caucus to work together to reframe the debate emphasizing core American principles, such as equality and dignity, civil and human rights for all, and accountability and transparency. We will also work to ensure that the voices of those most affected by the punitive and unaccountable enforcement and border policies of the last several years will be heard in the political debate.

We are deeply concerned that current U.S. immigration enforcement policies are undermining family unity and workers’ rights and devastating communities of diverse ethnic and religious backgrounds across the country. These policies and practices at the border and in the interior have proven not only to cause intense suffering in our communities, but they also stifle economic development, burden the judicial system, and waste taxpayer money. Current immigration policies have negative effects on everyone living in this country, causing divisions among community members and creating a less free, fair and vibrant community for us all. We do not agree that “immigration reform” should spend even more of our nation’s resources on these same divisive programs.

In the coming weeks, we will be drafting a set of principles that are aligned with our shared vision and that outline a new approach to reform which is grounded in a human rights framework.

OUR SHARED VISION:

We believe immigration laws should be grounded in fundamental civil and human rights and the human dignity of each individual. True reform means establishing a system that values migration, supports family unity, protects the rights of workers, promotes racial justice, ensures the health of our communities, and addresses the root causes of migration while preserving our basic American values. True reform must be oriented to address the injustices created by the broken immigration and criminal justice systems. This includes making these systems accountable to communities and subject to rigorous independent oversight and judicial review.

True reform must include a pathway to full citizenship for those currently living under threat of deportation as well as for those seeking to reunite with their families. Full citizenship means equal rights that include being a full participant in a free and vibrant society that works to promote and protect the rights and well-being of all.
Proposals for reform that increase harsh penalties for immigration violations, separate families, discriminate against women, or criminalize communities are unacceptable and violate American core values of justice and equality. Legalization should aim to keep families together—including those family members who have had past contact with law enforcement. The pathway to citizenship should not become an excuse to further divide and criminalize immigrant communities.

OUR PRINCIPLES

The Reform Enforcement Caucus will approach the renewed efforts to achieve immigration reform with a set of principles and values that will keep our communities united and that will make enforcement accountable:

- We will not sacrifice one community for another.
- Security of individuals and communities must come first.
- Families must remain united and not be torn apart.
- Every enforcement institution, personnel, program, and project at the borders and in the interior must be transparent and accountable.
- We reject attempts to criminalize immigrant communities and will work to extricate the immigration system from the prison-industrial complex.
- We will promote the American values of equality and due process of law.
- Local communities should be directly involved in any decision-making about immigration enforcement and border policies and in any review of enforcement systems.
