

If you have tested positive for HIV, or if you have AIDS, you have legal rights to protect you from discrimination.

HIV discrimination happens every day. There are laws that ban bias, protect families, and preserve privacy — but they are often misunderstood or ignored by schools and hospitals, by police and in prisons, at work, and in many other places.

Fighting HIV is hard enough. You shouldn't have to fight discrimination too. Illegal HIV discrimination often happens in the following areas. If you are having similar problems because you have AIDS or are HIV positive, we may be able to help.

- Denial of Medical Care
- Privacy Violations
- Discrimination in Food Service and Health Care Jobs

- Discrimination in Residential Facilities
- Loss of Parental Rights

If anything like this has happened to you, call us.

HIV & Your Civil Rights

The ACLU AIDS Project is here to protect the rights of people with HIV/AIDS.

EQUALITY
DIGNITY
PRIVACY

hiv@aclu.org 212-549-2627

www.aclu.org
The ACLU AIDS Project
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004