Statement of Interest: A Woman's Place

Amicus Curiae, A Woman's Place (AWP), is a private, non-profit organization that envisions a society where all individuals are safe in their relationships and can flourish. AWP provides a full range of assistance and support services for victims of domestic violence and their children, including a free 24-hour hotline, a full-service residential shelter, individual and group counseling, legal and medical advocacy, and a children's program. As domestic violence is a community issue, requiring community effort and support to successfully eradicate, AWP also provides comprehensive community-based domestic violence training, education, outreach, and advocacy. AWP's services to victims of domestic violence are free, private, and confidential.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

If even one municipality in our county has similar ordinances restricting calls to police, it poses a threat to the lives of our citizens and an obstacle for victims of domestic violence seeking assistance. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. Each and every life is of equal value and everyone deserves to flourish.

Many municipalities in the communities we serve have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. This month alone, two separate families accessed HOPE's emergency shelter to avoid calling police for fear of evictions. They moved their children to HOPE's shelter with only weeks of school remaining and left the areas where each had natural support systems. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness.

HOPE expresses interest in this on behalf of its board, advocates, and constituents. The decision at hand has the opportunity to create safety and guarantee the rights of all individuals to be free from abuse.

Amicus Curiae, the Centre County Women's Resource Center, is a private, non-profit organization that provides services to victims of domestic and sexual violence, dating violence and stalking. Our services include a 24 hour hotline, emergency shelter, transitional housing, crisis intervention, advocacy and support, civil legal representation, supervised custody exchange and visitation, and a wide range of prevention activities and programs.

While no municipalities in our county currently have similar ordinances restricting calls to police, several are considering such ordinances. We know that landlords frequently track police response to their properties and neighbors, sadly, do not hesitate to report visits by police during domestic violence incidents to the landlords. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. Affordable housing is exceptionally difficult to locate in Centre County and the fear of eviction increases the risk that victims of domestic violence will not seek the services and support they need from law enforcement.

Amicus Curiae, Clinton County Women's Center, Inc., is a private non-profit organization that provides a variety of services to victims of Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault. Services offered include temporary emergency shelter, options and supportive counseling, support groups, legal advocacy, systems advocacy, education and prevention services.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at hand has extreme implications for victims of domestic violence, many of who face homelessness as they struggle to maintain their safety and obtain permanent stable housing for themselves and their children. Affordable housing is most often only available through subsidized housing programs that have strict regulations.

Although the local housing program has no rules or regulations related to police calls, many private landlords include this kind of restriction in their leases. The behavior of abusers is far beyond the control of their victims and despite legal implications, many abusers choose to ignore restraining orders and cause police response. As a result of fear of eviction, many women choose not to call police and endure further abuse and fear. If they do get evicted they face homelessness, economic strife and possible loss of custody of their children.

Amicus Curiae, Crisis Shelter of Lawrence County, is a private, non-profit organization that serves as Lawrence County's domestic violence emergency shelter and sexual assault provider and has been doing so for more than 30 years. We provide a wide range of free services to women, children and men who are victims of all forms of violence including, but not limited to, domestic violence, adult and child sexual assault, child and elder abuse, and other serious crimes. Our programs include a 24-hour hotline; temporary emergency shelter; transitional housing; legal and medical advocacy; individual and group counseling, including art and music therapy; community education; school prevention education and training for professionals.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. Several municipalities in our County have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. In fact, our Counseling/Advocacy Supervisor recently accompanied a victim to a preliminary hearing for a "disorderly house" charge because of too many calls to the police. Fortunately, the judge did dismiss the case.

We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness.

Amicus Curiae, Laurel House, is a private, non-profit organization that provides comprehensive services for domestic abuse survivors and their children, along with domestic violence prevention education for students and other community members throughout Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. Our services include: nine bedroom shelter for women and children who are endangered at home due to domestic violence; 12 units of post-shelter supportive housing; 24/7 Hotline; counseling; court accompaniment; support groups; on-site crisis response with law enforcement and medical personnel; teen dating abuse prevention education and community awareness education.

We join the Amicus Curaie brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

Within this past year we are aware of at least one tragic, potentially fatal, situation in which a domestic violence survivor from our area was threatened with eviction due to her phone calls to law enforcement when her ex-boyfriend repeatedly came to her home and threatened and/or assaulted her. The woman was so afraid that she would be evicted that she did not call the police when he stabbed her, leaving her to bleed out in her apartment. Fortunately, a neighbor did call the police. The woman was subsequently airlifted to the hospital and her life was saved.

Laurel House works with over 1500 domestic violence survivors each year, both through our Hotline and through direct, in person, supportive services. Many of the people who call our Hotline, or who reach out to our Counselor Advocates in other ways, are reluctant to call the police due to their fear of facing eviction. With limited affordable housing options in our region, many victims, if evicted, can find few alternatives other than returning to the abusive significant other, or facing homelessness for themselves and their children.

Respectfully,

Beth E. Sturman

Free-of-charge quality counseling services are provided to victims and survivors of DV and dating abuse regardless of gender or sexual orientation: female, male, transgender, lesbian, gay, bisexual, or heterosexual. All of services are offered in English and Spanish to clients from all parts of Philadelphia, surrounding counties, and southern New Jersey.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

Selected areas within our county have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. Such laws violate a tenants' First Amendment right to contact law enforcement. Many of the clients we serve remain within abusive relationships because they feel they have limited to non-existent options. Laws that further restrict contacting police place survivors and victims of abuse in further jeopardy. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. It is our firm belief that challenging such laws not only places them before the scrutiny of the court but ensures the safety of our clients.

Victims have no power to control the actions of their abusers. All people who are in danger should be able to call police for help without being penalized or being evicted because of their need to protect themselves. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. Not calling police – whose purpose is to render assistance in situations where individuals are in danger – leads only to more harm to victims as well as to property and/or bystanders such as neighbors who may seek to intervene on a victim's behalf.

Statement of Interest: Sargent Shriver National Center on Poverty Law

Amicus Curiae, Sargent Shriver National Center on Poverty Law, is a private, non-profit organization that provides national leadership in advancing laws and policies that secure justice to improve the lives and opportunities of people living in poverty. The Shriver Center achieves its mission by directly serving low-income clients, advocating for people with low-income in public policy debates, and building the capacity of the nation's equal justice providers through training and communications. The Center's Housing Justice Unit works to preserve and expand the supply of affordable housing and to protect the housing rights of low-income tenants, including survivors of domestic and sexual violence and persons with criminal records. Specifically, the Safe Homes Initiative of the Shriver Center advances policy advocacy, administrative reform, and litigation to protect the housing rights of survivors of domestic and sexual violence.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. This case has far-reaching implications for families that have been victimized by domestic or sexual violence. Tenants who have been victims of domestic or sexual violence often face dangerous and difficult decisions about their housing. They are extremely vulnerable to homelessness as they struggle to maintain safe, stable housing and escape abuse. They are also frequently subjected to discrimination by landlords. The Shriver Center has represented victims of violence who have experienced discrimination because of their status and drafted state and federal laws to safeguard victims living in rental housing. We have grown increasingly concerned about the impact that nuisance property ordinances – also often called crime free housing ordinances – have on the safety and wellbeing of victims of domestic and sexual violence. Through our own work and that of our partners, we are aware of such ordinances resulting in victims being threatened with eviction because they sought police help with an abuser, victims not calling the police in the first place out of fear of losing their homes, abusers using the possibility of an eviction to silence victims, and victims with orders of protection being turned away by landlords that are worried about future calls to the police. We have therefore been engaged in efforts throughout Illinois to educate local governments and the public about these dangerous consequences of nuisance property ordinances, and to challenge ordinance enforcement that harms victims of domestic and sexual violence.

In the most recent fiscal year from July 2011 to June 2012, Survivors, Inc. has provided 6,269 days of shelter and nearly 7,630 hours of counseling to 673 victims of sexual assault and battering, with 159 individuals being housed in Survivors, Inc.'s Transitional Housing Program. This year at mid-year Survivors, Inc. is showing a 26.5% increase in unduplicated individuals accessing services, so it appears that the 2012-2013 may be another record year.

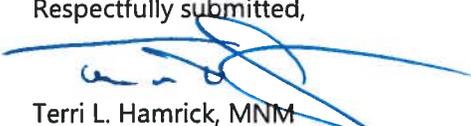

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

In the Commonwealth, some municipalities have ordinances restricting calls to police. This has far reaching impact, even outside of those municipalities. We know by nature of domestic violence, victims and their children may be forced to flee to a county or town outside of where they lived with their abuser. Adams County is a very rural county, and is one of the fastest growing Pennsylvania counties since 2000. This makes Adams County a perfect place to relocate a victim to further isolate and control that victim. We have assisted victims to return closer to their original community, and often, Survivors, Inc.'s dedicated staff continue to stay in contact.

Martha was moved to Adams County with her two small children. Once moving far from her support network, or what remained of it, her husband successfully continued to isolate her- and the abuse escalated. She took her children and left after a violent physical assault where he kicked her repeatedly in the stomach because she suspected she was pregnant. After seeking shelter with Survivors, Inc., she chose to relocate to Norristown. She started to put together a violence free life for herself and her children. Sadly, her peace would not last. She was not the only one that moved from Adams County, as her abuser quit his job and returned to the area as well. He began to systematically stalk and threaten Martha, and her neighbors would call the police each time he would arrive. Shortly after another assault, Martha was shocked to learn that she was being evicted. She had nowhere to go, she and her two children were homeless. She felt returning to her abuser would result in her death. (Identifying information has been changed to maintain this victim's confidentiality)

We regularly hear from our clients who access our services who are originally from areas with similar ordinances that restrict calling police. They are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. This also has a chilling effect on other municipalities, as victims' fear that this can happen in their community, and perpetrators will attempt to use this information as a method of maintaining control and preventing the victim from fleeing. We have also had a large influx of victims from this area seeking shelter, for the reasons discussed.

Unfortunately, Lakisha Briggs saw the direct impact of this when out of fear of losing her home, she did not call the police on her abusive partner, and instead suffered physical violence so severe that she had to be airlifted to the hospital for treatment.

No victim of abuse should be subject to additional violence out of fear that she might lose the roof over her head, or subsequently, be subject to homelessness for herself and likely her children if she is evicted for trying to protect herself and her family.

Statement of Interest: The Law Offices of Women in Need

Amicus Curiae, the Law Offices of Women in Need, is a private, non-profit organization that provides comprehensive civil legal representation to victims of domestic violence in Franklin and Fulton Counties. The purpose of the representation is to enhance safety, autonomy, and restoration for the victims.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness.

Sincerely,

Kate Cramer Lawrence

Statement of Interest: Women of Color Caucus of PCADV

Amicus Curiae, The Women of Color Caucus (WOCC), are a member of PCADV a private, non-profit organization. We were established on April 13, 1981, primarily to actively encourage and support the involvement and leadership of Women of Color in all PCADV programs. Women of Color reflect a diverse group of women and include but are not limited to those who are African, African-American, Asian-American, Native American, Chinese, Filipino, Haitian, Hispanic, Indo-Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Latina, Pakistani, Panamanian, Thai, and Vietnamese.

The WOCC recognizes that we must continue to strengthen the bonds between us, and together through collective action, we will work to:

- Advocate on behalf of Battered Women and Women of Color
- Serve as an advisory group to PCADV and its member programs in matters of significance to the WOCC constituency
- Provide support to the WOCC constituency who work within PCADV.

We join the Amicus Curaie brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety while establishing stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

We represent individuals from across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and its municipalities and some of our counties have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. We regularly hear from our members who have direct contact with clients that are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their homes. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness. Please consider our petition to create fair housing ordinances across the commonwealth of Pennsylvania as this issue greatly affects the safety of those experiencing domestic violence.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Respectfully submitted,

PCADV WOCC

STATEMENT OF INTEREST: Briggs v. Norristown
Submitted by the Women's Center of Montgomery County

Amicus Curiae, the Women's Center of Montgomery County, is a private, non-profit organization. Our domestic violence program, which serves more than 4,000 victims each year, provides services which include: a 24-hour domestic violence and crisis hotline; elder abuse counseling and supportive services; legal advocacy; court accompaniment; individualized peer and group domestic violence counseling; information and referral; hospital accompaniment; stalking prevention on college campuses; emergency relocation funding for victims; prevention education and outreach to the community and schools. Our programs are administered by more than 185 trained volunteers and a paid staff of 16 employees in our six offices located in Elkins Park, Norristown, Lansdale, Pottstown, Colmar and Bryn Mawr.

We join the Amicus Curaie brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

Since Ms. Briggs is a resident of our county, and this matter arises from a restrictive ordinance that exists in our community – in our county seat of Norristown – we believe that we have a particular interest in seeing this ordinance reversed. Through our work with more than 4,000 victims of domestic violence each year, we regularly encounter resistance from landlords who refuse to rent to victims trying to relocate to safety, as well as landlords seeking to 'punish' the victim with eviction for acts committed by his/her offender. Ordinances such as the Norristown ordinance further victims these individuals and frequently force them back into the abusive home.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST: Briggs v. Norristown

Statement of Interest: Women's Resource Center, Inc.

Amicus Curiae, Women's Resource Center, Inc., is a private, non-profit organization that provides life-saving intervention services to victims of domestic and sexual violence in Lackawanna and Susquehanna Counties.

We join the Amicus Curiae brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

Two municipalities in our county have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. Recently, one woman and her children were evicted after telephoning the police while her abuser was beating her in her home. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness.

STATEMENT OF INTEREST: Briggs v. Norristown

Statement of Interest: YWCA Greater Harrisburg

Amicus Curiae, YWCA Greater Harrisburg, is a private, non-profit organization that provides comprehensive crisis services and safe emergency and transitional housing for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault and homeless women and children.

We join the Amicus Curaie brief submitted by the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence. The case at bar has far-reaching implications for victims of domestic violence, many of whom face homelessness across the state as they struggle to maintain their safety and establish stable housing and economic autonomy from their abusive and controlling former or current intimate partner.

Several municipalities in our county have similar ordinances restricting calls to police. In one instance, a client survived a violent attack by her boyfriend. After contacting police, seeking medical attention, and filing for a temporary protection order, her landlord presented her with an eviction notice saying she was creating a disturbance in the building. We regularly hear from our clients that they are not calling police because they are afraid of being evicted from their home. If evicted, many victims are forced to either return to live with their abuser or face homelessness.
